She Whipped Her Lover.

Pretty Emelia Revere, an eight een-year-old German maiden, who lives at Hamburg avenue and Leonard street, Williamsburg, is the heroine of a horse-whiping episode that took place yesterday morning. Emelia looked for a time with fondness upon Gustave Zoman, an energetic young man of twenty-seven. who resides at No. 114 Fourth Avenue, this city. Gustave paid sedulous court to the fair Williamsburg as the Irish, belle and hoped soon to make her Mrs. Zoman. But young hearts are changeable, and pretty Emelia happened to meet another love and de- feel more of indifference that of cided to cast Gustave off.

Just how it happened Gustave could not tell. For days he lingered around the Revere household. undecided what course he should pursue. Finally he decided to persist in his suit, and yesterday morning he called upon the fair Emelia with the request that he again be taken into her good graces. He had in the meantime incidentally learned thename of his hated rival, and found that the latter had a much bigger cash capital and that this was the principal reason why she repelled him.

Gustave had afready given Emelia the ring which would have joined them. As he mounted the steps that led to her house he bitterly but insist upon getting Dr. King's thought of that fact.

He saw Emelia, however, and with an utterly utterness of yearning reminded her of her promise to marry him, and that the guest had already been invited for the marriage feast.

Some Characteristics of Harrison.

Chauncey M. Depew was beaten for the presidential nomination because he is a great railroad president and railroad lawyer. Depew and Harrison are both favorite disciples of James G. Blaine. It was arranged that if Bigine was not uominated either Depew or Harrison should be. Harrison is a railroad lawyer, like Depew, but it was expected that the people would not take much notice of this, "because he is such a little one.". ... colla.

But the people have sharp eyes and long memories. They know that Harrison is not only a railroad lawyer, but that of all that class of below cost, to close out. men he is one of the most obnoxlous to them because of his utter lack of sympathy with the laboring masses.

Perhaps Harrison should be judged lentently for his hostility to labor. He does not understand American workmen. He is something of an aristocrat, and boasts of his ances fors away back to the one who helped Oliver Cromwell to devastate ing until you get our prices.

Ireland.

Whene Blain congratulated Benjamin Harrison on his nomination, he could find nothing to say about the candidate but only about his father, grandfather and great-grandfather. Harrison himself has been all his life doing small jobs for great corporations. It is natural that he should fall into the rut of the monopoly aristocrats; that he should think the cheapest labor the best and believe the chinese just as good

But while intelligent and self-respecting American workmen may in the generosity of their hearts, hatred toward such a man, they are not at all likely to vote to make him President and give him a chance to devise another Burlingame treaty to swamp American labor under the flood of Asiatic competition.-New York Star.

Sheer Nonsense.

"A discouraged correspondent" writes us a long and doleful letter about his failures in life, and winds up as follows:

"The trouble with me is, that I cannot stick to anything long enough to make it successful. I can begin at a new business with a great deal of energy, but after a while I get disgusted with it, and then go at something else, only to get disgusted again. And so it goes. What am I to do? I have tried all sorts of business, but nothing seems to suit."

The only thing for such a person to do, is to make a choice of some business and stick to it, or else have his life a perpetual failure. The pretense that he cannot continue at any kind of business is sheer nonsense.

He is simply unwilling to sacrifice his own selfish inclinations. He does not like work of any kind. He amuses himself with a new occupation while the novelty lasts, but when that is worn off, and the business becomes work and not amuse- n ment, he gives it up. That is the
