AN EASTER DISCORD
 By GRACE G. KINCAID
 Copyright, 1901, by T. C. McClure

The coolness between Mrs. Wentworth and Mrs. Drewelowe was beginning to occasion remark. They met frequently, for Mrs. Drewelowe was the gracious mistress of a beautiful Euclid avenue home, while just around the corner, upon a short and unpretentious side street, stood the smaller house rented by Professor and Mrs. Wentworth.

Years ago they had been girls together in the little village of Mayville, when she of the stately mansion had been only Maria Dusenbury, daughter of the most shiftless man in the village.

In those days Mrs. Wentworth had lived on no side street, but in the stately white pillared mansion which crowned the highest hill in Mayville and which was pointed to with pride as the home of Judge Titus. Fate plays strange tricks! After the death of the judge, when the lawyers were quite through, somehow there was little or nothing left for the daughter, although one of the lawyers took his share and fled abroad within the year and the other built himself a new house.

The trouble began at the Culture Club. Mrs. Wentworth had felt sure she had detected a most peculiar smile upon Mrs. Drewelowe's face at the precise moment when she stood up to read her paper on "Egyptian Architecture." Then, later in the afternoon, Mrs. Roberts, also of Euclid avenue, had leaned over and said laughingly: "Mrs. Wentworth, Mrs. Drewelowe says she doesn't believe you ever wrote that paper. It was so good she thinks your husband must have written it."

Any clubwoman knows this is a most grievous insult.

Mrs. Wentworth gave charming little teas in a modest, side street fashion, and the bitterness rankled in her heart to such an extent that she left Mrs. Drewelowe off her list the next week. Then there was an elaborate social function at the Euclid avenue mansion, and Mrs. Wentworth did not receive a card.

But the climax was reserved for Easter morning in the vestibule of the Euclid avenue church.

Mrs. Drewelowe and Mrs. Wentworth met, and, remembering the sacred threshold, bowed less coldly than usual, then gasped and stood transfixed. Taking in every flower and knot of lace, they realized that their beautiful new Easter bonnets were exactly alike.

The husbands, balancing their hats carefully in one hand and with the other holding each a vestibule door, were courteously awaiting them. They had cordially shaken hands, for it had become dignified men to notice women's small quarrels.

Mrs. Drewelowe was first to recover. "A beautiful morning," she said in her sweet, even tones, and a bar of purple and yellow flashed from the window across the violets in her bonnet as she turned and swept after her husband.

Mrs. Wentworth bowed in silence, biting her lips in vexation, and raised a delicately gloved hand up to see if her bonnet, that had cost her so many economies, was really upon her head or upon that of rich Maria Drewelowe. She felt that now, as ever since they had lived in the city, Mrs. Drewelowe had the best of her.

A little path had opened through the garden of spring millinery across the congregation, and through it she saw Mrs. Drewelowe turn and stare directly back at her, smile in a superior way, then whisper something to Mrs. Roberts in the pew just behind, whereupon Mrs. Roberts laughed most immoderately, considering the time and place.

The hot blood rushed to Mrs. Wentworth's face in such force as to make her quite dizzy. She knew what Mrs. Drewelowe had said as well as though she had heard every word.

"Annie Wentworth, never content with running after me, has managed in some way to copy my bonnet, and don't you think, Mrs. Roberts, it is an outrage?"

Alas! Annie Wentworth, daughter of Judge Titus, to be thus openly flouted by a Dusenbury!

It was bad enough to be reduced to living on a side street, to watching her in the lead of the most exclusive set in the city, but to be accused of copying her clothes—that was the last straw. Move! Indeed they'd move the 1st of May! She would resign from the Culture Club! She would meet this queenly daughter of aimless, shiftless old Dusenbury or her husband, who had made his fortune in kerosene.

The minister soared away in magnificent flights of oratory, but Mrs. Wentworth's mind constantly returned to the problems of how the bonnets came to be alike and what Mrs. Drewelowe had whispered to Mrs. Roberts. At last she solved the first question. Mrs. Drewelowe had discovered her treasure, the little milliner who made it possible for her, the wife of Professor Wentworth, to appear for $10 in bonnets which looked as though they had cost $30, the poor little relic of better days who lived in the old tumble-down brick building behind the cathedral and who had a wonderful knack for copying expensive bonnets. To place her oldest customer in such a humiliating position! Mrs. Wentworth turned cold all over with the remembrance of the whisper. Oh, the letter she would send with the bonnet straight back to that traitress!

She was quite hysterical by the time the last amen was pronounced and hurried the dazed professor home at a rapid pace. Patiently he listened to the time worn complaints—the wreck of her father's estate, the bitterness of seeing Maria Drewelowe in her beautiful home while she must live in an obscure corner.

Tenderly he soothed her and bathed her throbbing temples. Years of wedded life had taught him the futility of argument when his wife's mind was made up. He remembered, too, that for love of him she had refused Henry Drewelowe back in the old sunny days at Mayville.

Unable to be up the next morning, nevertheless she managed to indite a bitterly accusing note to the little milliner and dispatch it with the bonnet by a messenger boy. Several days elapsed, and no answer came. Finally in desperation she gathered her strength and, boarding a downtown car, was soon mounting the steps of the old brick building behind the cathedral.

There was no answer to her first knock, so she rapped again. A faint moan came through the open transom. Then she turned the knob and entered. The room was in disorder; most of the little furniture it had contained had mysteriously disappeared. Only a bed, a chair and a table remained. Upon the table lay two opened letters, and beside them sat a bonnet box securely tied. Upon the bed lay the frail figure of the milliner, her face hot with fever. At this sight Mrs. Wentworth's wrath vanished, and she stood by the bedside only a sweet, helpful woman, her heart wrung with pity.

There was a rustic of silk lined garments outside in the hall, then an imperious knock, and when Mrs. Wentworth opened the door she beheld a second Nemesis in the form of Mrs. Drewelowe. The latter bestowed a curt nod upon Mrs. Wentworth, and that softened and already repentant woman stepped aside and allowed her to advance to the bedside. Mrs. Drewelowe heard her own name and Mrs. Wentworth's mingled, falling incoherently from the parched lips. After a moment she turned and faced Mrs. Wentworth.

"Annie Wentworth, this is our work. I wrote her a very harsh note Monday morning, accusing her of copying my new bonnet, which I bought in New York three weeks ago. She was in the house doing some work, and I felt sure she must have seen it through the treachery of the maids."

"And I," sobbed Mrs. Wentworth, "went back my bonnet Monday morning—scandalous note—perfectly scandalous!"

Then they sought the landlady and demanded an explanation of her neglect. She surveyed the two ladies with rising anger.

"Sure, ma'ams," she said, "an' I'm a lorn widdier myself with five childer to support, an' she's back on her rent three months. It's all along of her havin' to go on to Noo York an' git her bad brother out of jail, an' she's sold her furniture an' clothes an' gone without fire an' enough to eat to make up. Then, on top of that, two women—foine ladies in sassety—writ her two of the meanest letters you ever see in your life, an' then she went clean out on her head. They was all about a bonnet she see when she was in Noo York an' copied for one of 'em, an' she said the other one must have been on an' bought the identical bonnet, for it had just come over from Patee, an' nobody'd had a chance at it."

"Then letters done it. Mighty mean women, if they are sassety women, as would let loose an' abuse!"

"There! You have explained sufficiently," he interrupted Mrs. Drewelowe, her face quite crimson. "We will pay the rent due you and take charge of your roomer at once." And she drew out her purse.

When the little milliner had been safely tucked in the white hospital bed and Mrs. Wentworth was seated in the Drewelowe carriage rolling home, she suddenly exclaimed, "Maria, what did you say?"

"When? What do you mean?" queried that astonished lady.

"Why, Sunday in church, when you leaned back and whispered to Mrs. Roberts?"

Mrs. Drewelowe was lost in thought for some time and then said: "Oh, I know. I told her that, after all her instructions, the night before I had forgotten to make the mustard plaster for Henry's chest as she advised, and the poor man was blistered so dreadfully that if it hadn't been Easter morning he would not have tried to come to church."

It was a fashionable hour, everybody was abroad, and the dignified Drewelowe coachman felt quite humiliated by the peals of merry laughter which rippled from the aristocratic Drewelowe equipage.

An Unofficial Order.

Thomas, tenth earl of Dundonald, at his death vice admiral in the English navy, tells in his "Autobiography of a Seaman" of an incident on board the Hind, on which he served as midshipman. The pet of the ship was a parrot, the aversion of the boatswain, whose whistle the bird learned to imitate exactly.

"One day a party of ladies paid us a visit aboard. By the usual means of a 'twit' on the yardarm several had been hoisted on deck. The chain had descended for another. Scarcely had its fair freight been lifted out of the boat alongside when the parrot piped, 'Let go!'

"The order was instantly obeyed, and the unfortunate lady, instead of being comfortably seated on deck, was soured in the sea.

"Luckily for her, the men were on the watch and quickly pulled her out, and luckily for the parrot the boatswain was on shore, or this unseasonable assumption of the boatswain's functions might have ended tragically for the bird."

Obedient.

"Bessie," said her mother, "did you peel your apple as I told you to do before eating it?"

"Yes, mother," replied Bessie.

"And what did you do with the peel?"

"Oh, I ate that afterward."—Tit-Bits.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together and until the last few years supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney and Co. Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. Cheney and Co., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Mother Always Keeps It Handy.

"My mother suffered a long time from distressing pains and general ill health due primarily to indigestion," says L. W. Spalding, Verona, Mo. "Two years ago I got her to try Kodol. She grew better at once and now, at the age of seventy, she eats anything she wants, remarking that she fears no bad effects as she has her bottle of Kodol handy." Don't wait until doctoring symptoms. Go after the cause. If your stomach is sound your health will be good. Kodol rests the stomach and strengthens the body by digesting your food.
