THREE SOURCES OF KNOWLEDGE

Experience—Conversation and Reading—The Use of Pictures in Our Schools.

OSCAR VERNON HICKS.

Pictorial art ministers to an ornate law of our being, which cannot be neglected with injury to our individuality. It is as much the duty of parents, through pictorial art, to bring beauty into their homes, as it is to keep the moral atmosphere of the home pure. Indeed, the latter cannot, and does not, exist without the former. Our noblest men, and greatest characters, have been reared in beautiful, not costly, surroundings. Unfortunately there are yet many homes in this democratic nation, without beauty, refinement, pure moral atmosphere, or religion. It is only through our democratic system of education that we have hope for the children of such homes. It is a function of the school to furnish an environment of beauty, and a pure moral atmosphere, for the children during the time that they are within its walls. Such an environment in early life will never lose its charm to the future citizen, and never cease to exert a moulding influence for good.

The beauty, and uses, of pictorial art are no longer only for the homes of wealth, or public buildings, and magnificent churches. The idea of bringing this art within our schools, and making it accessible to all the children of our nation, is not an impracticable one. Modern ingenuity, and skill, has placed within the reach of modest means, artistic, tasteful, and faithful copies of the world's masterpieces in the fields of landscape painting, portrayal of profane, and religious history; and in the field of ethical painting. In every community a little labor, a patriotic feeling, a love of children, on the part of its citizens, can place suitable and desirable pictures in the school.

Pictures, like many other things, can be divided into two main classes: those that serve an evil purpose, and those that serve a good one. The pictures in home are not the only ones that children, and young people, feast their eyes on. There are many foul pictures hidden away, sometimes, which are taken out ever and anon, to be gazed at and gloated over and studied, by our children. In our colleges in many a room, are pictures which the occupant would hastily take down, and carefully pack away in the bottom of his trunk if he was contemplating a visit to that room from his mother, or sister. In our club rooms, and halls, of various organizations, are often pictures which would have to be removed before a delegation of ladies could visit these places without blushing.

What does this mean? It means that people are going to have pictures, and if they have developed the proper taste in this direction, they will have, and enjoy, good, uplifting pictures. While the mind is plastic, and susceptible to all influences, a healthy, uplifting knowledge of pictorial art should be introduced to children in the schools, and with all their "getting," let them get a good taste for, and knowledge of, pictures.

When this knowledge is acquired by children they will have developed a permanent capacity for the enjoyment of pictures, and obtained a high and enduring branch of knowledge which will develop and increase even after other acquisitions of the intellect have ceased to increase. Spiritual things—the sense of the beautiful and sublime, the soul of men—are the dominating and most enduring things in the universe. Pictorial art appeals to, and instructs, the spiritual part of men, and the study of this art is invaluable. It is a duty of the schools in our democracy to develop the sense of the beautiful and sublime; to interpret to the child the wonders of pictorial art; and it is a function of the church to nourish this sense after the child has left the influence of the school.

Let us feel that it is a privilege to bring the pleasure, influence, and power of pictorial art within the reach of every child, even the humblest and poorest. Let us hang upon the walls of our schools, landscape paintings that present to us in a definite, permanent, instructive form the beauty of nature; correct representations of historical events, and great historical characters; pictures that powerfully, and touchingly present human nature; and last but not least important, paintings of those masters who have given us such poetical representations of the events and characters upon which we base our religious faith. Our heritage of pictorial art is a glorious one.

"Around the mighty master came
The marvels which his pencil wrought,
Those miracles of power whose fame
Is wide as human thought."

We have seen that pictorial art is a source of thought, and hence contributes to knowledge. Moreover, it is the handmaid of nature; and in bringing the beauty of nature into a definite, permanent, instructive form it contributes to the well being of our aesthetic nature; and in doing the latter, it finds a place in our religious life.

Again we have seen that the language of nature is beauty, and men in responding to this language manifests an aesthetic nature. The development of this aesthetic nature is requisite for a symmetrical character and nature individuality. The development of the aesthetic cannot be reserved to the last to be attended to, or not, as opportunity may grant. Its culture from the beginning of education is of the utmost importance.

The aesthetic nature is the uplifting element in man; it creates a desire for a beautiful mind, and a beautiful character. Deprive men of it, and you rob life of half its charm.

Pictures are an element of the soul's food; children delight in them; they are invariably a source of ordinary humanity; a treasure of the wealthy class; the church rejoices in them.

Animate and inanimate nature sations the use of beauty through the means of pictorial art. The teachings of nature we can apply as a test for the value of art.

"First follow nature, and your judgment frame,
By her just standard, which is still the same;

Unerring nature, still divinely bright,
Life, force, and beauty, must all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test
Of art."

Mr. and Mrs. Wren were visiting relatives at Roberdel No. 2 last Sunday.

If the peaches don't get killed later on we will be blessed with the biggest peach crop we have had in many years, but we hear of one man that wants to engage all that will be made in Wolf Pit at $5.00 per bushel.

The Cordova Glee Club is practising and getting everything in shape for a concert next Saturday night, April 4th. From what we can learn they will give you something funny.

If the mill panic lasts long people will have to quit fattening hogs on biscuit.

Some of the people here are already beginning to talk picnics. Fresh fish of every description are coming in our village every day.

GOBLER.

Mr. Wm. H. Anderson, M. D., of Soda Springs, Ida., says that Bees Laxative Cough Syrup has relieved coughs and colds where all other remedies failed. Mr. Wm. F. Gibson, a prominent farmer and leading citizen of Scotland county, spent several days in Rockingham this week. Mr. Gibson is a man of wealth and influence and finds time to take a passing interest in politics for amusement. He is for Craig for Governor, and says his county will send a solid delegation to the Charlotte convention for the Buncombe man. This is as it should be, for Mr. Craig rendered the Scotland people no little service in their fight to establish their county.

When a man writes as fellows don't you think he means it? Mr. S. G. Williams, Powderly, Texas, says, "I have suffered for years with kidney and bladder trouble, using every preparation I came across and taking many prescriptions all without relief until my attention was called to Pineules. After 30 days' trial ($1) I am feeling fine." Money refunded if not satisfied. Sold by L. G. Fox.

For Commissioner of Agriculture

Mr. Editor: Having resided for quite a long time in North Carolina, and having so many friends and relatives as citizens of your good county, I naturally take much interest in the political movements in your state.

At the approaching Democratic State convention which will convene in the city of Charlotte, in June, there will be no more important place to be filled than that of Commissioner of Agriculture. While there are several gentlemen already announced for this position, yet I know none are better qualified, and by education and practice more eminently fitted for this place than Hon. Robert W. Scott, of Alamance county. I had the pleasure and honor to be present at his happy marriage, and for several years lived his neighbor, and learned to love him. His father died when Robert was a mere youth. His two older brothers engaged in the mercantile and tobacco manufacturing business, while Robert remained on the farm, providing for his mother and two sisters. He was educated at Chapel Hill, is a forceful and practical speaker. He served in the state senate and three times was elected from his native county to the house of representatives, and while a member of the legislature favored the proposition to establish the Normal and Industrial College at Greensboro, also favored the A. & M. College at Raleigh, and introduced the bill and supported it until enacted into law, to equip the agricultural building at the A. & M. College. He has been a member of the state board of agriculture for six years, and has ever been interested in the improvement of the common schools and good roads, in fact in all measures that would render country life more attractive. Mr. Scott's best and most valuable work for his state has consisted in his remaining on the farm and by practical demonstration proving to the young men of the state, the wonderful developments in improved farming. He has by personal application transformed an old worn-out plantation of red hills, gullies and sage fields into one of the most productive grain, grass and stock farms in the state. Prospective stock farm gentlemen from other states annually visit the "Melville Stock Farm," of which Mr. Scott is owner and proprietor.

As Richmond county has no candidate for commissioner of agriculture I am quite sure that her delegates could not vote for a more competent man than Mr. Scott. I am informed that he will go into the convention with several of the upper, central and eastern counties solid for him, and it is believed that he will be in the lead from the beginning. Knowing Mr. Scott so well, and how well qualified he is for this position, I am writing this article for the purpose of informing your people who he is, and what he has done for himself and his state.

Respectfully,
J. PRESTON GIBSON.
