Patriotic Service, College Training, and The Draft by Edward K. Graham, President of University of N. C.

"How can I render the most valuable service to my country during the war, before I am called to the colors?" Every young man under the draft age is asking that question.

The War Department this summer gave a new answer to this question. It said, with the support of all branches of the administration: "Enter college, if you are fitted to do so,—or return to college if you are already enrolled—and enlist in the Student Army Training Corps."

The fact that it seems likely that the draft age will be lowered to 18 does not affect the soundness of this advice.

Young men who become of draft age soon (whether 18 or 21) should enter a good college in September, and devote themselves completely to the physical, mental and military preparation required by the great job they will be called upon to perform.

They should not think that because the time may be short until they are called they should do nothing but WAIT. Nor should they be tempted now to accept an unusually remunerative job.

A new condition confronts our young men. In the immediate future they are going to fight. Money is not what they need for that. Training, preparation is their supreme and only need.

The best training camps for early preparation, the Government has learned from experience, are the colleges. So its advice to young men is clear and emphatic: "Enlist in the colleges now. Stay there until I call you; make a hundred per cent job of it while you are there. The question how long you are to stay,—whether a month, six months, or a year—need not concern you. I'll let you stay as long as I can. It is to my advantage as much as to yours for you to get all the training possible."

This is clearly the thing for young men not yet called into service to do, both from the standpoint of personal advantage and patriotism.

Public spirited men and women may be of great service by bringing the importance of this matter to the attention of their young friends, and by helping them through loans (protected by insurance) if they lack the means to go.

"By enlisting in the Students Army Training Corps you will become a member of the United States Army. You will receive a uniform and be given military drill under officers detailed by the War Department. During the early part of your course you will receive ten hours of military instruction per week, six of which will be drill, rifle practice, and other outdoor training and four of which will be academic work, for which military credit is given, such as mathematics, English, foreign languages, history, science, etc. You will be carefully rated both by the college authorities and by the military officers who will help you discover a special line of military service for which you have the greatest capacity and preference. Later in your course you will have an opportunity to specialize in a branch of training designed to fit you to become an officer of field artillery, medical or engineer officer, an expert in some technical or scientific, service and so on.

On reaching the draft age you must register with your local board. You may remain in college until your call is reached under the Selective Service Law. At that time it will be decided whether you will be called immediately to active service or whether you should remain in college to complete the course you are pursuing. The decision will depend upon your achievements in your military work and in your studies as determined by the military officers at the college and by the college authorities.
