Prehistoric Ritual Murder Uncovered

BRIGHTON, England (U.P.)—Scientists have uncovered the strange story of the ritual murder of a woman by savages 35,000 years ago, before the last ice age.

Her skull was found buried ceremonially under hundreds of tons of rock in a cave near Whaley, in Derbyshire. Pygmies appeared to have scooped out the inside of the woman's head and eaten the brain, according to A. L. Armstrong, who unearthed the remains.

Armstrong, in relating the story of the "Mysterious Lady of Whaley," said her skull had been pierced by spears and she had been beheaded.

"The woman lived before the last ice age and she may have been a chieftainess or a witch doctor," Armstrong said. "She had been beheaded and her skull was buried in a box formed by rock slabs.

"It obviously was a ritual murder."

Armstrong added that the skull had five squared holes, probably made by a bone or stone spearhead and the bone of the skull was splayed inwards.

Sir Arthur Keith, one of the greatest living authorities on an ancient man, said the woman was aged 50 to 55. Her skull had been broken into 68 pieces and was restored and photographed after six months.

The rest of the woman's body was not found.

Crow's Bold Kidnaping Of Duck Thwarted

LANSING, Mich. (U.P.)—The story of four Michigan conservation officers saved a young hen mallard duck from kidnaping by a big crow.

The four men, Arthur Leitz, Jack La Fear, Charles Bowen and Bert MacGregor, were loading forest fire equipment near the Gray Creek swamp when they were attracted by the squawking of a mallard duck. Frightened by shouts of the men, the crow dropped its prey.

The mallard was found with one foot and one leg broken, but when released later managed to fly away.

Robin Has Lots Of Luck But Most Of It's Bad

CAPE ELIZABETH, Mo. (U.P.)—Things have been tough for Mrs. Joseph H. Johnson's pet robin.

While the bird still was recuperating with a broken wing and injured leg received in a collision with an automobile, a boy hit it on the head with a croquet mallet. Mrs. Johnson pried open the unconscious bird's beak and administered water and later juicy worms.

Within a week, the invalid hot bled onto a road and was struck by a truck. A neighbor placed the apparently dead bird beneath a tree and went for a shovel to bury it. When she returned the "corpse" was very much a live, though in a staggering condition.

Well on its way to recovery for the third time, the bird now faces a critical housing problem. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are Florida-bound for the winter and unable to find anyone to care for the robin.
