Advice Given On Cutting Farm Costs

Labor and manhours can be saved on the farm through mechanization, says C. B. Ratchford, in charge of Extension Farm Management at State college, but this is not always the most practical, nor the least expensive method.

One of the best ways to cut down on the cost of labor is to keep all of the equipment in good working order, Mr. Ratchford said. By proper greasing and maintenance good equipment will last many years longer, he said.

The simplest piece of farm equipment, such as a middle buster, operates better if it is in proper adjustment, and is not only capable of doing more work but is also easier on the man and mule, or tractor.

To save labor at rush seasons, farmers should repair all equipment during winter months when other work is practically at a stand-still, he said, adding that rainy days also provide an opportunity for "catching up" on this maintenance.

All farmers spend considerable time on chores like feeding and watering workstock, chickens, or hogs, the specialist said. Labor can be saved on most farms by simply planning the quickest way to do these chores. It may be possible to feed the chickens, hogs and workstock at the same time, thus saving extra trips.

By making running water available on the poultry and hog ranges, additional labor time and work can be saved. If hogs and poultry are on range, labor can be saved by carrying a week's supply of feed to the range on a wagon and storing it in a weatherproof box.

Farm buildings and lots are not always arranged for the most convenience and to count for economy of time. A few changes, or better still, careful planning when the farmstead is laid out make a big difference in the day's work, Ratchford said.

convenience in making. If a bed must stand in a corner or alcove it should be equipped with good ball-bearing casters so that it can be rolled out for making or for cleaning the room.

The height of the beds is also important for convenient making. The higher beds of a generation ago had at least one advantage—they could be made without stooping. Beds that stand 20 to 24 inches from the floor require much less effort to make them than the newer low beds. Moreover, higher beds are handier when caring for a sick member of the family. The height of hospital beds is good evidence of this.

If the men or children in the family happen to track tar, road you find black marks on rugs or floors as a result, remove marks oil or asphalt into the house and promptly. The older the stain, the more difficult it is to remove. And for these stains use cleaning fluid (grease solvent) not soap and water.

On carpets and rugs scrape off all the black possible with a dull knife. Then sponge with the cleaning fluid using a light brushing motion in order not to rub the stain into the fabric. Several light applications using a fresh cloth each time may be neces-

... HINTS ... To Homemakers

The present trend toward smaller bedrooms, built-in double bunks for children and lower beds may save expense in building and furnishing but adds to the time and effort spent on bed-making, housing specialists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture remind home-planners.

Making beds by pullman-porter methods is too strenuous for many women but is unavoidable with some of the new space-saving bed arrangements, the specialists point out. At least 18 inches clear space around three sides of the bed is needed for
