THE CALL TO ARMS.

Elsewhere in this issue is the remarkable proclamation of the governor setting apart the fifth and 6th of November as Good Roads days and calling upon every loyal Carolinian to show his fidelity to the State by shouldering the pick and shovel and marching forth to help shake off the shackles of the mud tax that are hampering the material, intellectual and moral progress of North Carolina.

When the chains of British tyranny were fastening themselves upon the thirteen American colonies North Carolina was the first to sound the danger signal and it was her sons who upon the battlefield at King's Mountain turned the tide of the war of the American Revolution and kindled anew the hope of freedom. It was North Carolina troops who first met the enemy at Bethel, who forged farthest to the front at Chickamauga, who carried the banner of the Southern Confederacy through that hell of blood and carnage through the hail of lead and steel and placed it on the crest of Cemetery Ridge at Gettysburg, who were last to lay down their arms at Appomattox. A North Carolinian was first to sacrifice his blood upon the altar of his country in the Spanish American war. When it was seen that the curse of ignorance was blighting the hopes of the boys and girls of North Carolina, you rallied to the call of Aycock, Ivler and Joyner and there is not a child in all the state who has not an opportunity to obtain an education. The people of the state, shoulder to shoulder, marched as one man to the polls with the little white slips forever drove the whiskey curse from the borders of the Old North State. In every crisis that has arisen in her history North Carolinians have met the issue as a united band. Never have they failed or faltered in her hour of need.

Glorious as is her history, mighty as are the achievements of her children, North Carolina could not accomplish it all at once. It was necessary that we build step by step and our forefathers have left us a heritage of bad roads that are costing us twelve millions of dollars every year—Jackson county's loss is eighty-four thousand. This condition is intolerable to a progressive people, a people with a glorious past and a name that must forever be maintained at the standard fixed by their progenitors.

Once again North Carolina has reached a crisis. The mud tax is hindering her further progress. It must be removed. "No man or nation can stand still; we must either go forward or go backward; it is eternal law; we cannot change it."

The danger signal has been given. Our Governor has sounded the call to arms, and we will obey it. As our sires rallied at the sight of the Fire Cross in old Scotland's hills, we will gather three million strong at the clan call of our chief, and not with regalia of warfare but with implements of peace and strike a mighty blow for progress and prosperity to sound the knell of bad roads in North Carolina, to build for ourselves and the generations of our posterity. It will be a time of great rejoicing and wonderful achievement, a day that will adorn one of the brightest pages in the brilliant history of the greatest Commonwealth on the American continent.

The exhibit of the Southern Railway at the Jackson County Fair was well conducted, instructive and largely patronized. It is exactly the kind of demonstration that is needed and we sincerely hope and are confident that we shall have Col. Wood and his assistants with us in the same capacity next year.

Wise in its day and generation was that committee of the Legislature that voted down that Bible-in-the-public-schools proposition.
