

IMPROVEMENT OF SANDY SOILS.

BY KARL LANGENBACK.
It is important to sandy soils to plant clover or legumes in short rotations frequently and plow the green vegetable matter under. These soils are not only lacking in nitrogen, as a rule, but particularly in vegetable mold. This is very essential for them, as it enables this type of soil to hold water. In themselves, they dry too rapidly even in average seasons, for good crop yields. Lime is almost invariably necessary, both for the green cover crop and for its after effect on succeeding growths. But it is essential to use more lime than the analysis calls for. Lime producers will have this analysis made for the farmer at a nominal cost.
