

To Fly Over South Pole in Most Carefully Planned Trip in History

BYRD SAILS FROM NEW YORK IN HIS ANTARCTIC SHIP SAMSON IN QUEST OF BLEAK REGIONS.

The South Pole, which has been hitherto only twice attained, is the objective of Commander Richard E. Byrd in the most carefully planned voyage of exploration ever made. Commander Byrd is departing from New York in his Antarctic ship, the Samson, accompanied by fifty-five volunteers, among them such heroes of the air as Bernt Balchen, Thomas Mulroy and Harold I. June. Commander Byrd is taking three planes with him. He believes the Antarctic can be conquered by the airplane just as the Arctic has been conquered. He has also purchased for the venture an iron freighter the Chelsea, which is in New Zealand. The Chelsea will be used mainly to transport the supplies. After leaving New Zealand Byrd will establish a base on the Ross Ice Barrier, about 1,000 miles from the pole. A self-supporting settlement will be established here and the Samson will be sent back to New Zealand to prevent the loss of her by crushing in the ice. Byrd will establish bases from the Barrier to the Pole, 100 miles apart from each other, to be used in case of emergency. When the bases have been laid, Byrd will fly toward the Pole in his tri-motored monoplane named after Floyd Bennett. The South Pole is on a plateau about two miles high, which makes it very difficult for an aviator as the air is very rare, and the landing speed must therefore be very great. Thus, special care must be taken to preserve the landing skis of the plane, the demolishment of which would make it difficult, if not impossible, for the flying party to return to the base. The trip will also be devoted to scientific study, with a special mapping camera used to chart the regions explored.
