Raleigh, N. C., May 29.—Since the discovery of the Mediterranean Fruit Fly in Florida, any fruit in which there are found small worms or maggots should be an object of suspicion and those who find infected fruits are asked to send them to Dr. R. W. Leiby, State Entomologist, Raleigh or to the Bureau of Entomology, at Washington, D. C.

"We are asking our county farm and home agents to cooperate in every possible way to prevent the spread of this dangerous fruit and vegetable pest," says Dean I. O. Schaub of State College. "The State Department of Agriculture at Raleigh is in charge of regulatory matters of this kind and we bespeak for them the close cooperation of all citizens interested in keeping this pest out of our State. It is more than likely that some infected fruit was shipped to this state before the fly was discovered and if this be true, we should make every effort to prevent its spread."

This new bug is greatly feared. It was found in Florida when there were still 9,000 cars of citrus fruit to be harvested and shipped. Entomologists say that it has been a serious hindrance to fruit and vegetable growing in all semi-tropical regions. About the easiest way to name the horticultural crops injured by the fly is to set aside pineapples and bananas and let the pest have the remainder. The fly injures peaches, plums, pears; apples, citrus fruits; peppers; tomatoes; melons, figs, persimmons, grapes, and so on and on.

The fly is not so large as the common house fly. The rear end of the female is equipped with a drill which is used to puncture the skin of fruits and vegetables and make a small cavity beneath. Here anywhere from one to six eggs are laid and more than one female may use this same hole. When the eggs hatch, the maggots burrow through the fruit eating as they go and the fruit is ruined. The maggots change to adult flies in the ground and it takes from three to four months to make the life cycle.
