A desert in an Oasis, might be an apt name for the Carolinas.

Kentucky sends out her casualty list and then her election returns.

The sounds of firing the other day, may have come from either Havana or Louisville.

All these anti-reepeal candidates elected in North Carolina, and no convention to go to.

Only 16 men were killed on election day in Kentucky; which proves the saying that "they don't have elections in Kentucky—they have young wars."

The world's series and the elections being out of the way, in this country, the newspaper can give proper front page attention to that war going on down in our neighbor, the island republic of Cuba. 52 were killed and 127 wounded in street fighting in Havana on yesterday.

The King of Afghanistan was assassinated, Wednesday. It would seem that an incident like that, far away in Afghanistan, would be of little consequence; but, since 1924, we have watched such trivial items with a strange fascination, for it was the "solving of an obscure and Duke by a noble" that set the world afire, and started the tramp of millions of soldier feet.

Postmaster General Farley contributed considerably to the election of a Republican as mayor of New York, running on a fusion ticket, by supporting an independent candidate against the regular Democratic nominee. They had a battle royal, and as usual when Democrats are divided, a Republican was elected.

THINK AGAIN, DOCTOR

Dr. A. J. Barton, militant dry, down Wilmington way, asserts that the next step should be the repeal of the beer and wine law. The Journal questions the wisdom of Dr. Barton's statement. The wiser course might be to throw additional safeguards about the places where license has been issued to sell the 3.2 concoctions. The people have given a mandate to the State to deal wisely with the liquor problem, so as to make for temperance and sobriety. Extreme or fanatical positions are never wise, and have brought about the undoing of the prohibition cause in the country at large. If the prohibitionists will use common sense in dealing with the problem in North Carolina, the State will remain dry for a long time, and most North Carolinians who voted for repeal on Tuesday, will be satisfied.
If in their political maneuvering get in the saddle, it will not work to the interests of temperance and sobriety in North Carolina, as the voters devoutly hoped, when they cast their ballots on Tuesday.

FOR PROHIBITION AGAIN

Twenty-five years ago North Carolina voted for State Prohibition by a majority of 10,000. On Tuesday, the first time in a quarter of a century that the question has been put up to the people, the State turned down the proposal to repeal the 18th Amendment, by a majority ranging upwards of 150,000. Eighty-six of the State's 100 counties gave majorities endorsing prohibition.

There have been many theories advanced as to the whys and wherefores. The truth is that North Carolina did not repudiate anybody. The people of this State were not administering a speaking to any individuals.
No political advantage for any party can be seen in the results of the election. The one thing that North Carolina did do was to register the overwhelming opinion of her citizenship that she is opposed to liquor.
The people of this State were not so anxious about whether there is to be legal liquor in New York, or in any other State. They voted against repeal for fear that a repeal majority would be taken as an expression of the people that North Carolina was turning her back on Prohibition as a State policy in dealing with the liquor problem.

It is possible, even probable, that if the question had been submitted two ways, one ballot being on repeal of the 18th Amendment and the other on repeal of the State prohibition laws, that the majority against repeal of the 18th Amendment would have been less, and the majority for the retention of prohibition as the policy of this State would have been much larger.

There are those in the State, Senator Bailey among them, who believe that National Prohibition should be repealed and that State Prohibition should be retained. It is this class, and they are not inconsiderable in either numbers or influence, which would have made the large difference that would probably have been registered in the balloting, had the question been submitted both ways.

However, the question is settled so far as North Carolina is concerned, and settled for a long time to come. The 18th Amendment is gone; but there will be no tinkering with the State dry laws, except, perhaps, in an effort to make them more workable, and to promote the interests of temperance and sobriety. The 21st Amendment guarantees that it shall be illegal to transport intoxicant from one State to another, in violation of the laws of a State, thus guaranteeing the right of States to control their own affairs in their own way. The Congress, when it next meets will have to put into operation legislation for the protection of those States that have decided to retain their prohibition laws. The national platform of the Democratic party, the party now in power, practically guaranteed that such would be done; and President Roosevelt, in his campaign speeches, repeatedly made the assertion that States deciding to remain in the prohibition ranks would be given the protection of the federal government. There can be no doubt that the pledge will be kept as soon as Congress meets, in January.

Prohibition has been dragged as a dead herring across the trail of political thinking, for a good many years.
Attempt after attempt has been made to inject it into partisan political campaigns. Professional politicians, some times hiding under the cloak of the church, have tried to use it to gain votes for selfish ends. Now it is dead as a political issue in State and in Nation; and it is well that it is out of the political picture. The necessary two thirds of the State have ratified the repeal of the 18th Amendment, eliminating the problem from national politics. The people of North Carolina have spoken in no uncertain terms, eliminating it as an issue in State politics. It would be foolish for any man, faction, or political party to attempt to revive it as an issue. Moreover, that we can think of nothing that would do more harm to prohibition itself than to try hereafter to inject it into political fights. The man who does so will be thinking more of his own or his faction's welfare than of the good of the cause he purports to have at heart. The wise prohibi-tionist, not the fanatic, will be wary of any attempted revival of the issue as a political matter. It was by allowing the issue to be used as a foothold in political campaigns that contributed more than any one thing to the undoing of national prohibition.

The matter of prohibition is settled by the people themselves, or rather the ones who were sufficiently interested to go and vote, have settled it; and henceforth, the political campaign should be waged around matters that are of political instead of social significance. The atmosphere has been clarified. The herring that has beclouded the trail of political thinking has been returned to its box; and we to that faction or party that tries to fetch it forth again.

MR. QUEEN MAKES STATEMENT

Editor Jackson County Journal: I wish to express through the columns of your paper my appreciation for the support of the men and women who voted for me in the election held on last Tuesday.

While the majority was against me and the cause which I represented, there were many good features of the election which we should all be proud of. The people can be relied on to express their convictions if left alone and made to feel their responsibility to their State and Nation, and this should show our lawmakers that the true sentiment of the people can be shown when our election laws are so arranged that no interference is offered by either side, and when left to the people who are interested enough to be at home and go to the polls and express their wishes for officers, as well as platforms.

As far as I know the campaign was carried on by the opposite side in "first class and" entirely satisfactory manner, and wish to express my appreciation of same. The press of the county gave the question a very fair and complete analysis of the problems before the people, and I wish to thank them for doing so.

The main point which I would like for the people to get from this election is the fact that we do not need the Absentee Ballot any more, as it is much safer to rest our future welfare with the people that love home and country enough to vote their convictions, as they did this time, than to have the politicians select officers by means of using men and women who do not care enough to go to the polls, but allow their names to be used for illegal purposes.
