Roosevelt Popular Vote Lead 83,861 To 73,838

As the electoral votes of the nation-wide "Next President" poll for this week. These 45 electoral votes are decided in the state of 45 states for the week will be held at 261 for Roosevelt, and 237 for all Republican choices. At this time they stand at Roosevelt 267, Republicans 261 and 3 tied in Missouri.

The popular vote to date is 170,795. Roosevelt continues to hold his lead with 83,861 as against 73,838 for all Republican choices. Other Democratic choices total 8,409, while Third Party choices garnered 4,687.

A noticeable decline in ballots for other Democratic and Third Party choices, during the last two weeks indicates that the 1936 race is to be a two party battle. Early returns during the first weeks of the poll brought a much larger vote for Third Party choices than during the past two weeks.

The Journal Correspondent Tells Of Washington Matters

40 YEARS AGO

Washington, November 13—The best way Washington observers have found of forecasting the Administration's course is by studying the personalities close to the President and noting the rise and fall of their influence with him. After that the guessing begins—because there is such a wide variety of men and women, holding such a wide diversity of views, all of whom having the Presidential ear to some extent, that nobody can be quite sure whose influence is being exerted most strongly.

Secretary of the Treasury Morganthau has long been a close personal friend of the President and he is regarded here as having steadily increased his influence in the White House. Mr. Morganthau is very strong for cutting down Government spending, coordinating the work of the emergency agencies and working as fast as possible toward balancing the Federal Budget.

At the opposite end on the question of economy is Harry Hopkins, Relief Administrator, who is also extremely close to the President, and whose philosophy is for giving everybody a job on some Government project.

There is a strong group of conservative Presidential advisers who are extremely critical of Mr. Hopkins' policies. Besides Mr. Morganthau, these include Professor Raymond Moley, who still has the President's ear although he is out of office; Frank C. Walker, who is a definite conservative influence and is frequently consulted by the President; and Postmaster General Farley, who is the President's most trusted political adviser.

Then there are two distinct groups which are classed by these conservatives as radicals. One of them is headed by Professor Tugwell, who has built up a strong following for his idea that the Government should extend its control over all industries. Dr. Tugwell is still welcome at the White House. He has as his right-hand man Gardner C. Means, who functions as a general adviser in the AAA. Another group is headed by Professor Felix Frankfurter, and the belief grows that this group has gained more influence with the President in the last year than any other. The Frankfurter theory of Government relation to business is that enterprises should be prevented from becoming too large and should be policed by the Government to prevent them from doing wrong, rather than dictated to or controlled.

Secretary Wallace continues to have close and influential relations with the President. Mr. Wallace is a good deal of a puzzle to Washington. As Secretary of Agriculture he is regarded as doing a good job. As a philosopher, he often expresses himself in ways which seem to back up the Tugwell theory of Federal control of industry.

It is said some bitterness exists in the Administration's official household between the conservatives and those of the Tugwell-Hopkins school of thought. On the conservative side observers here list Secretary of Commerce Roper and Secretary of the Interior Leakes, neither of whom is believed to have any particular influence with the President.

Secretary of State Hull has everybody's respect, but is not a particularly influential figure in shaping Administration policies except in foreign affairs. Joseph Eastman, controller of railroads, is very close to the President and regarded as influential. Jesse Jones, head of RFC, is not a close Presidential adviser, though he is well liked as an efficient administrator.

The President is showing an inclination to follow the lead of his conservative advisers, especially in the matter of consolidating emergency agencies and centralizing budget control.

The latest move in this direction is the coordination of all the housing agencies under Peter Grimm. Mr. Grimm has been made Assistant Director of the National Emergency Council. He has been in the real estate business in New York all his life, and is highly regarded as a public-spirited, forward-looking, able citizen.

Mr. Grimm has been the backbone of the Citizens' Budget Commission of New York City, whose thorough-going investigation of the tax situation and

The weather for the past few days has been delightful, warm enough to require little or no fire. Rain enough has fallen to make plowing possible.

Work on Rev. Mr. Thomas' new dwelling, which has been suspended during the crop-making season, has been resumed and is being vigorously prosecuted.

While up at Mr. D. J. Allen's, Monday evening, Nov. 4, we helped to eat a watermelon which Mr. Judson Allen had saved from frosts and cold. It was very much enjoyed, although a little late in the season.

The breaking down of the bridge across the millpond some time ago, and the inconvenience resulting therefrom has stirred the public spirit of our people and they are now engaged in demonstrating that the way to build a bridge is to build it, and they have gone to work at it in earnest. It was determined that the work should be of the most substantial character and stone abutments were decreed to be substituted for the usual log piles, and already one excellent abutment has been finished and work upon the other commenced. It is expected that the abutment will be ready for the bridge next week, and Mr. M. Buckanan, who has the contract, will run the work upon that so that it will be only a short time until we have a good bridge, and the only one with stone abutments in the county.

Some five or six years ago, Mr. J. S. Jarratt, who was then in business here, secured options on some recently discovered kaolin properties in the vicinity, went to New York and succeeded in getting capitalists interested in the project of developing the mine, and preparing the clay for market. A company was organized and active operations promptly begun. A site was purchased and a large and substantial factory was built, and equipped with first class machinery. Two very large boilers and an engine of 300 horsepower furnished the motive power. Mr. D. M. McKenzie had the contract to furnish and put up the machinery for washing and pressing clay. The operations for the company, from causes unnecessary to mention here were productive of results by no means satisfactory to the stockholders. Mr. McKenzie claimed that the company had failed to pay him according to contract filed a mechanic's lien on land, building and machinery, and brought suit for some $5,000 alleged to be due him. The company resisted payment on the ground that the contractor had failed to comply with his contract. The case was continued from term to term for various reasons and did not come to trial until last spring. Term of our superior court at which time judgment for about $2,700 was given in favor of Mr. McKenzie. Some two years ago work was stopped at the factory and mine, although there seemed to be no difficulty in disposing of the kaolin, many car loads having been prepared and shipped. After the judgment of the court, execution was issued and the property advertised for sale to satisfy it, but upon sale day no bidders appeared and the sale was postponed. In the meantime Mr. J. S. Jarratt had obtained judgment against
