

An airplane view of Western Carolina Teachers College

Western Carolina Teachers College

joins the many friends of Dan Tompkins, brilliant editor of The Jackson County Journal, in congratulating him on a quarter of a century of versatile and courageous journalism.

The Jackson County Journal

under Tompkins' editorial guidance, has been a constant champion of public education and especially of Western Carolina Teachers College. It has, moreover, battled unremittingly for good roads, for the National Park, and, one might well add, for every worth-while enterprise in Western North Carolina. Such a journal is worthy of recognition as a genuine educational institution.
