POOR BOY SHOWS 'EM UP

The lad Corrigan, by flying the Atlantic with a cheap, untried plane, with the doors tied shut with wire, and with a prize pole to knock the tail off the wings, crowd How and Hughes and his flying parrot off the map, and made Hughes, L. H. Long, and the rest of the heroes of the air a laughing stock. Just when the world was giving millionaire Hughes his four companions, and his expensive plane, equipped to the last word, its acclaim, Corrigan and his mate hopped into the light and stole the show. Altogether, nothing has been proved except the case with which a foreign flier could bomb American cities.

MR. GRAVES' ALTITUDES

Mr. John Temple Graves, in his syndicated column in the Asheville Citizen, and other papers, states that he has learned something. Although he has mailed letters many a time at East Flat Rock, Mr. Graves says he has just learned that it is the highest railway station east of the Rockies; and that he found it out by way of a magazine article. Unless Mr. Graves was being sarcastic toward the writer of the magazine article (which we suspect was the case) he yet has something to learn. For instance, Balsam, in this county, is a railway station, a post office, a village, and a summer resort, and is more than 3,300 feet up in the air, or approximately half a thousand feet higher than East Flat Rock.

The thing that has amazed us for many years is the multitude of things newspaper and magazine writers learn, that are not true.

ROOSEVELT'S POPULARITY

Not since Old Hickory Jackson was strong enough to name his successor and to continue to direct the policies of the government, has there been a president who held his popularity with the people for as long a time as Franklin D. Roosevelt. All most half way through his second term, with all the opposition that those who disagree with him have been able to muster and thunder against him, Mr. Roosevelt's trip across the country to the Pacific coast has demonstrated what most people already believed, that so far as his hold on the people is concerned, his eye is still undimmed and his strength remains with him.

Lincoln was an unpopular man at the time of his assassination. Cleveland was defeated at the end of his first term, and his second brought him vilification and abuse. Taft, later Chief Justice was so unpopular, despite his great heart and fine personality, that even a great section of his own party turned against him and brought about his defeat. The great Wilson, mighty friend of the common folks, died of a broken heart because the people would no longer follow him and his lofty concepts and ideas. But Roosevelt is still going strong with the people. If the next two years do not prove the hold he has on the people of America, Mr. Roosevelt will be able to name the next President and to see that his policies are continued.

additional Congressmen, which would give them a respectable minority representation of 170, only 50 fewer than a majority. And unless New Deal candidates for Congress sweep the field in the concededly Democratic districts, the Republicans, in the event of holding 170 seats in the House, could form an effective coalition with conservative Democrats to block the Administration program.
