Webster Child Dies Sunday In Savannah

Betty Sue Sorrels, three year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sorrels, of the Little Savannah community of Webster township, was drowned in Big Savannah Creek, about four o'clock Sunday afternoon. It is canadice and application of stated that members of the Sorrels and others had been to a baptismal service on Savannah earlier in the afternoon and were returning to their home. Some older children were swimming in the creek below where the child was drowned, and the little girl broke loose from her companions and ran to the creek, stating that she was going swimming. She is said to have jumped into the creek at a point where the eral tendency in Washington these days to look for more big things to happen after the election. Likewise there has been quite a bit of complaint from the general public on the ground that things that should be done now are being delayed until the votes are counted in the Fall. One of these coming events, whether or not it was really timed to coincide with the election, will be the distribution of allotment checks to the dependents of soldiers under the new allotment act.

To be perfectly fair to the Army and to Government financial agencies, the establishment of a system for payment of these allotments to the relatives of 2,-500,000 soldiers is a tremendous job that cannot be done in a day. The Army contends it justifiably will require several months, and that the election has nothing to do with the date for the first payments.

All Western North Carolina had its first test blackout on Monday night, and the experiment was pronounced a great success, as citizens, Civilian Defense Officials, police, sheriffs, county and municipal officials, State Highway Patrol, and other agencies coordinated in making the test. The Army was supposed to cooperate, but the signal from Charleston that had been carefully prearranged, never came through, and Civilian Defense Officials, gave the signal from Asheville.

Dan Tompkins, chairman of civilian defense in this county. congratulated the Chief Air Raid Warden, and the other officials upon the efficiency of the blackout. He observed the effects from the court house. Within less than two minutes after the whistle at the paper mill and the fire siren on the town hall had begun the alarm, not a light was visible in the city. Air raid wardens cruised the city and found but two violations. One apartment on Courtland Heights, had the lights blazing and the win-Rationing Board have been in dows open; but the warden called the attention of the occupants to the fact that there was a work out a plan whereby the blackout in progress, and the trucks hauling wood can be put lights were extinguished.
