HOW HE DID IT.

The success of Woodrow Wilson in securing the passage through the New Jersey legislature of so much reform and progressive legislation was the political surprise of this generation. How did he do it? Some papers said he used the Big Stick on the legislature. Others said he was able to do it by the threat of veto power, others that he hypnotized legislators. Here is how he did it, as stated by Governor Wilson himself:

"The press made a mistake when it said I dragooned the legislature to carry out certain reforms. I did nothing of the kind. My work broke the strangle hold the machine had on the legislators and today these men are happy. Many of them wanted to get away from the machine. They dared not do it themselves for fear that their families would come to want. * * * "Machine rule is a curse to any city, county or state. The people are realizing this all over the land, and the days of the bosses are numbered."

When the machine determined to elect Jim Smith as senator, it was not prevented by any Big Stick or threat of veto. Governor Wilson appealed to the people. He announced an appointment at Newark—Smith's home—and made a speech and gave his reasons why Smith should not be elected. The people did the rest. A governor who will go to the people for a righteous cause when a legislature is in danger of falling down, can secure such popular sentiment for a right cause that legislators cannot resist it.—News and Observer.

In this week's issue of the Courier appears the first installment of a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, February 2, 1911, by Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson, in the columns set apart for "Communications and Selections." The discussion of the "Great Destroyer," alcohol, from a scientific standpoint is a subject of world wide importance, and will appeal to the intelligent interest of the readers of the Courier. As the speech is lengthy it will be published in weekly installments until finished.

The physicians of the state are manifesting increased interest in the crusade against hook worm disease. Two-thirds of them have supplied information concerning the prevalence of the disease in their practice, and one-half of them have used the State Laboratory of Hygiene to have examinations made, and practically an equal number have treated anywhere from one to several hundred cases. So keenly are they alive in some counties that they are constantly distributing literature about the disease and its prevention where it will do good. Many have appeared before the county boards of commissioners to secure aid in the establishment of the rural free dispensaries for the examination and treatment of the disease. Dr. Wiskliffe Ross, administrative secretary of the Hook Worm Commission, who visited the State Medical Society at its recent meeting in Charlotte, spoke in the highest terms of the unusually high type of men who constitute the assemblage. When the physicians of the state are seen and known one will expect and receive their untiring support in every movement for the uplift of the people. By making application to the State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C. you will be furnished with free literature on the disease, sanitary toilets; and to make examination for the disease free.

Now comes from Charlotte that an extremely critical stage has been reached there in water supply, and fear is entertained that within the next few days it may become necessary to haul water by means of tank cars from the Catawba river. We regret this for Charlotte, but the comfortable thought comes that that enterprising town has already voted bonds for $350,000 to supply this thirsty want.

'Tis strange that such a fight should be made on the man who has done more to protect the people of America from deleterious food than any other American citizen. "And how they do say," says the Knoxville Sentinel, "that the whisky trust was the prime mover in the recent battle on Dr. Wiley. It has not forgiven him for exposing the making of alleged whisky out of high wines and for insisting on an answer to his question: 'What is whisky?' But probably all the food and drug fakers who object to truthful labels were in the hunt and hoped to be in at the death."

This is a sad commentary: "Lawrence, Massachusetts, had 86,000 people in 1910. It had grown 37.3 per cent in ten years. It is the seat of large and flourishing industries. This city of the Bay state has been looted by its officials. To open the schools in September and to pay current expenses, the city must have $500,000 above its legal borrowing capacity. There are banks willing to lend the money and trust to the future for a title but they are not willing to trust the money to the officials in office. The legislature, therefore, has been asked to give Governor Foss power to appoint a commission of five to take charge of the city. A late mayor is in jail, his secretary has pleaded guilty to bribe taking and a fire marshal and an alderman are in prison. Various other members of the city government are under indictment for stealing or for taking bribes. About everything seems to be the matter with Lawrence. The citizens are asleep."
