Castoria

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told us of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osason, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various patent nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphia, soothing syrup and other harmful agents down their throats, thereby causing them to prostrate graves."

Dr. J. F. Emerton, Chicago, Ill.

Castoria

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

Dr. A. A. Adams, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of this agent, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular Castoria, we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

United Hospital and Dispensary, Boston, Mass.

FOUND OUT.

By CORNELL CONWAY.

Robert Arnold was leading an ill, happy life at Mountain Top.

He had recovered his former health, but was now afflicted with another malady. He had fallen in love with former Forrest's granddaughter, Edith.

He was not destined however, to enjoy his dream long alone, for Belle Burleigh, who had long sighed for the rich young bachelor, heard of his strange infatuation, and fearing to lose him had insisted on setting forth with her mother for Mountain Top at once where they took board.

He was no match for these two society women, and poor Edith soon saw that he was being drawn away from her. In her pride she would not let him see how she suffered from neglect, while he attributed her coldness to coquetry.

At last a summons came that his uncle was dying. He must return to the city to see his old benefactor for the last time.

His heart turned to her in this moment of real sorrow and not to Belle Burleigh, but Edith did not know.

She sobbed herself to sleep that night, and awakened with a start; the slow tread of many feet came up the garden path; the door was unfastened by a persistent hand.

She heard her grandfather go down stairs in his flapping slip ers and cry:

"Who is there? and a voice answered:

"It's me, Uncle Forrest—Caleb Pink from the station. There has been an accident; your boarder is hurt. We've fetched him here, he asked us to. The doctor is coming."

In his half-conscious state, Arnold thought he heard Edith's voice utter his name, and had a memory of seeing her white and tear stained face bending over him; but as he recovered he saw only Belle Burleigh and her mother.

They nursed him very tenderly. They really cared for him, it was plain.

"There is a letter waiting for you, said former Forrest one day. 'I asked the doctor if you might have it now. He said yes. I expect it's bad news. It's got a mourning border. I do feel afraid you've lost your uncle."

It was from the family lawyer, and announced his uncle's death. It bore, also, other news. The great fortune was not his, only a modest income.

Some men might have rejoiced in such a legacy. It seemed very small to him who expected to be a millionaire.

He turned on his pillow with a sigh and closed his eyes. He heard Mrs. Burleigh and her daughter come in, but he feigned sleep.

He could not break the news to the girl who cared so much for all that wealth could buy. He felt like an impostor.

The two women whispered together; he heard them plainly.

"Asleep?" said Belle.

"Yes, under the influence of an opiate I suppose, my dear, said Mrs. Burleigh. "Dear me! how that scar changes his looks; and I suppose he will always limp. See here, child—a letter! It has the news in it, no doubt."

Belle tiptoed across the room. Arnold felt her lift the letter from the counterpane.

"It cannot be any harm for me to read it, she said in her angelic way."

He could see her in fancy with out opening his eyes. Then the paper rustled. He heard her lips between her teeth, "A few miserable thousands!" and then she stole back and replaced the massive where she found it.

There was a sound of gliding footsteps the door closed, and a low wailing cry, "I understand her now!"

"Your friends are gone," said poor Aunty Forrest, coming in at twilight with the tea. "The doctor's note says you are very bad."

note and this box; and I expect they felt real sorry not to speak to you.

When he was alone Arnold opened the box. The ring he had given Belle fell into his palm; and the note ran thus:

"I have never disobeyed mamma in all my life. She thinks it best I should do this. Adieu."

Belle Burleigh.

"and for this woman I have lost Edith Forrest," he moaned as he fell back upon the pillow.

He left the farm as soon as he was well again, and went back to the city to begin a new life—an earnest life—with a purpose in it.

He worked hard for a year or two, and every now and then he wrote a letter to old Aunty Forrest, who answered him at length.

At least her signature was attached to the neat, well written letters he received.

At last he wrote that he was coming down at Christmas, and he went.

The snow was on the ground but a round golden moon lit the mountains on Christmas night. In the lonely parlors of the farmhouse a fiddle and pianist set the young folks dancing, and cakes, cider, nuts and apples were vanishing with wonderful celerity.

But out on the porch the sounds of music and laughter were heard but faintly.

Edith and Arnold stood there. He had her out to "see how bright the moon was," and had caught up a great shawl and thrown it about both their heads.

"Just one kiss before you go in," he said.

She turned her lips to his. What was the use refusing? She had already promised to give him her heart and hand in the May-time.
