NORTH CAROLINA.

A snake has been seen in Durham county by an old colored man that is as long as a fence rail, and as large around as a stove-pipe.—Durham Recorder.

von Moltke was born on October 26, 1800, at Parchim, and a few years later his parents settled in Lubeck. The two sons were sent to the cadet school in Copenhagen, to train for the Danish army, which their father had entered in 1811. However, in 1812, the two young men petitioned to enter the Prussian army, which was granted them. Count von Moltke, however, spent some years as military adviser to Turkey, where his budding genius was acknowledged and appreciated. It was not until 1846, however, that Prussia realized the powers of her son, when the victory of Konigslatz rested with her army, directed by von Moltke. It shows an earnest desire to hold the scales of justice properly balanced. He is already assisted in his efforts to honestly administer the law, by the talents and pains-taking labor of the State's Attorney, W. C. Newland, who is wisely awake, and ever on the alert to secure the ends of justice, and that no guilty man escapes. Both Judge and solicitor will leave here with the good opinion, and the largest two and a half acres, and could not be placed inside a tumbler.—Salisbury Truth.

We saw some strawberries this week, raised by Mrs. John West, that were very large. None of them weighed less than three-quarters of an ounce, and the largest two and a half acres, and could not be placed inside a tumbler.—Salisbury Truth.

Old farmers tell us that the recent frost is a good thing for the wheat crop. The frost came just at the time to kill out all the cockle and not injure the wheat, and they say, as a consequence wheat will be almost free from cockle this year.—Widespread Chronicle.

We are informed that in Taylor's Bridge township (in the neighborhood of Mr. J. M. Powell's), that the hail stones that fell there last week were so large that after being carried in a basket for a mile that they were still as large as turkey eggs.—Clinton Chronicle.

During the thunder-storm late Tuesday evening the lightning struck the barn of Mr. Jackson Watson, about two miles north of Rockingham, and destroyed it together with all the feed stored in it. A mule and a wagon were saved from the burning building.—Rockingham Recorder.

One of his greatest feats was the calm direction of a battle some distance from the scene of action, a battle which resulted in a Prussian victory. Von Moltke's maps were done with such a nicety, that every footpath, as well as each road, was accurately marked. An interesting tale is told of his generalship. An old German was anxious for news of his son, and determined to ask the general himself. On reaching his tent, von Moltke asked him what was wanted, and was told the old man wished to hear something of his son's whereabouts. Taking down his map, von Moltke showed his regiment, and then showed the uneasy parent, his present situation, kindly adding, "that detachment of the army is to reach here (marking a spot on the map) early to-morrow morning, about seven. If you are there you will see him." At seven, precisely, the following day, the lad's regiment passed the spot, and father and son met for a few brief moments. At another time, three separate armies were to be concentrated on one particular spot, at a certain hour on a given day. If either failed to meet the other, the result would be utter failure and annihilation; needless to say each arrived at the rendezvous at the stated time, without any mishap. This is an unparalleled feat in the annals of war, accomplished by no other general.

The names of Metz and Sedan will forever be connected with the name of von Moltke, for at both towns he reduced large French armies to submission. The cities were captured by the French. Von Moltke surrounded them both, thus preventing communication with the outer world. At the same time, the Germans marched on Paris, laid siege to it, and finally starved that city into surrender.

A correspondent at Granville writes that a difficulty occurred there between J. J. Perkins, the post-master there, and D. J. Whitchard, editor of the Greenville Reflector. The difficulty was caused by complaints made by Whitchard, in his paper, that the office was not kept open at proper hours for stamping letters. It is said that Whitchard was somewhat bruised.—News and Observer.

We had a heavy rain storm to sweep over McDowell yesterday evening, accompanied by much lightning and thunder. The lightning struck a large open pine standing in the yard of J. C. McCrary on Main street in Marion. The farmers who came to town this morning report a heavy fall of hail west of town. W. F. C.

The killing of Wales.

The Progressive Farmer and Washington Progress have recently been calling the attention of the people of the State to the open road for profit that lies in the raising of mules for market. The Progress says that 500 mules from Kentucky and Tennessee have been sold in that town at an average of $100 per head, and that the demand is not yet supplied. The Washington Star estimates that at least 6,000 have been sold in the whole State, making the aggregate sales amount to $600,000. Commenting on these statements the Charlotte News and Courier says:

Returns begin to come in about the second year, instead of after five or ten years; frost never affects the crop except to make it a little triskly; it is not subject to blight or the earwax; it transports itself to market, and there is always a market for it.

In 1868, von Moltke's wife died, and the latter part of his life was passed at Kreisau in Silesia, near the spot where she was buried. She was an Englishwoman, Mary Burt, von Moltke's sister-in-law's step-daughter. On October 26, 1890, his birthday, the Emperor of Germany, William II., conferred on him an unprecedented honour. Certain colours, usually kept next the Emperor's own sleeping apartment, were taken with a strong guard to von Moltke's residence, and left in his custody for several hours. Soch a guard had never before been given to a subject, or even to any member of the Royal Family, and we may feel sure that no one appreciated the honour more than the privileged custodian.

On April 24, 1891, Count von Moltke peacefully breathed his last, his death being due to sudden failure of the heart's action. During the day he had seemed unusually well, and had been greatly gratified at winning thirteen tricks at whist in the evening. Shortly afterwards, he complained of not feeling well, and went to his room, presently followed by his nephew, Major von Moltke, who found him breathing with difficulty. Physicians were at once summoned, but, before they could arrive, the master-spirit had fled. He died at his official residence on the Konigplatz, in Berlin. The Emperor himself, accompanied by the Empress, and two of her sons, came to pay the last respects to his remains, and the Emperor and his wife were allowed to kiss the Emperor's hand.

Mr. Reddick is greatly beloved by all his friends. He is full of good nature, is handsome, and exactly the same height and weight as all other Gates county men, except Gen. Roberts, who left the country and went to the war before he could grow up.

The Sally Michael pipe is made in this county, and is considered almost as fine as the meerschaum. It is the finest clay pipe made in America.—Ed. HERALD.

A NEW PARTY.

Formed at Cincinnati, and the Phillipsburg, N. J., August.

Your committee on resolutions beg leave to submit the following.

First. That in view of the good social, industrial and commercial revolution now drawing upon the civilized world and the new and living issues confronting the American people, we believe that the time has arrived for a reorganization of our political system and the formation of what should be known as the People's Party of the United States of America.

Second. That we most heartily endorse the demands of the platform as adopted at St. Louis, Mo., in 1890, in Omaha, Neb., in 1891, and in Chicago in 1892.

McDowell Superior Court is still in session. Judge Hale presides over the deliberations of the court with ease and manifest impartiality. He shows an earnest desire to hold the scales of justice properly balanced.
