Miss Erwin sprang to the ground and escaped with slight bruises; Mr. Ridenhour also jumpted and was uninjured; but Dr. Carlton and Miss Carlton were thrown violently upon the stone crossing near the residence of W. E. Anderson. Dr. Carlton was picked up unconscious and carried into Mr. Anderson's house, where he remains at this hour, still unconscious. He has a severe wound upon the back of his head, where he struck the rocks in falling. Dr. Henry F. Long was called in and later Dr. M. R. CHAPTER I.

It was late in the summer or the fall of the year 1864 that the regiment of Home guards to which I was attached, lay in camp in a pleasant and healthful spot, on a pine ridge in the eastern part of the Palmetto State. There were there would be no election if there no young men in our ranks. We were all presumed to be men above the age of forty five, and consequently unfitted for the exacting duties and severe hardships of an active campaign. When drawn up in life, I must say that the array of beards sprinkled with gray, games of base ball on the 4th-one cash. Also one hundred bushels made, which does not here appear, we were pretty well entitled to the exemption from active service accorded us. Yet nowhere could there have been gathered together a hardier set of men than composed our regiment. Most of them, by their previous mode of life at home, by their toils on the farm and the discipline of sylvan sports, had been so hardened by exerise in the open air, that they were capable of undergoing hard-

To answer to our names at roll call, to mount guard around the camp, and to undergo the daily drill of one or two hours, was all that was required of us in our present situation. Time would have hung heavy on our hands but for the fact that the regiment was drawn altogether from the adjoining counties, and each of us found himself associated with old triends and neighbors with whom he had for years lived on terms of friendship and intimacy.

ships and privations that would

Now and then, by some means, a stranger whom no one among us knew, was enrolled in our regiment and had a place assigned him in some one of its companies. Generally, such new-comers soon found friends and associates and became known to us all.

One day at the roll call a new name, that of Jacob Grier, caught my attention; and as he responded to the call, turning to notice this late accession to our company, I saw a man slightly built, but vigorous and active in appearance, only four or five files away. His face was one of a type which frequently occurs among the backwoodsmen of the South-thin, developments. His expression was calm and composed, but standing there in line with some five or six hundred other men, he seemed isolated and alone, as if he was utterly unconscious of their presence and had no part or lot with them. For him they did not seem to exist, And yet he did not seem to be abstracted or lost in a reverie. His was not the face of a man to be drawn away from things around him and to lose himself in thought. I felt assured that he had by nature such a mental constitution as would prompt him to notice every thing about him with a keen and lively interest; and that nothing around him now attracted his attention or seemed in the slightest medicine from different doctors for that followed, I saw but little of cough grew worse, and the doctors from all, and to have fellowship with none. I never heard the noon and resulted in a victory for on Green street, Esq. J. M. Toms a great deal of phlegm. After reading sound of his voice but when he of the many cures effected by Dr. answered to his name at roll call. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, I No one knew who he was, or whence he came.

About ten days after Grier joined our regiment, some little tinued with the medicine, and am matter of business, connected with we are not able to say. The Sec. appropriate it as his own?" "No danger of that "returned Gresham confidently, "I wrote to his former Captain in Virginia, making enquiries about him, and find he is a brave and trusty fellow; and, besides that, he has a good, honest face that is the best of all recommendations."

I said no more, but almost immediately left the tent on my way to my own quarters. In passing along I saw Grier issue from a clump of small oaks, leading out his pony. It was a dark chestnet animal scarcely twelve hands in height, its smoth coat profusely flecked with white. I recognized it at a glance, as belonging to that small breeu of horses that are found wild on the islands and marshes of the sea coast, fleet, hardy and unflagging creatures, that for a long rapid journey can scarcely oe equalled. I watched Grier as he mounted this beautiful pony, and rode off on his way, in the dusk of the evening, to a town somewhat more than twenty five miles away. I thought it a strange freak that he should undertake this night ride of fifty miles, when he could tarry but a few minutes at most in the town to which he had set out. It would be midnight before he could reach that point and he would find all doors closed and every one abed What could he want in the old town at that still hour of the night?
