New generation claims Washington

WASHINGTON — Hailing a changing of the guard for the nation, Bill Clinton became the 42nd President of the United States Wednesday as a reunited Fleetwood Mac assured spectators "It'll be better than before — Yesterday's gone, Yesterday's gone."

As Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist administered the oath of office to Clinton, the new president swore that he would "faithfully execute the office of the President of the United States." Vice President Al Gore was sworn in by Justice Byron White.

Clinton, who descended the Capitol steps through a royally-draped red curtain, delivered his inaugural address to hundreds of thousands of anxious Americans. In spite of the forecasted cold weather, Clinton said the new Democratic administration represented "spring" in the depths of winter.

"My fellow citizens, today we celebrate the mystery of American renewal," Clinton said. "You, my fellow Americans, have forced the spring." While members of Congress, Cabinet designees and other distinguished guests looked on, Clinton praised the outgoing Republican administration and thanked President George Bush for his loyalty and dedication.

"I salute my predecessor, President Bush, for his half-century of service to America," he said.

Bush and his wife, Barbara, attended the ceremony, as did Vice President Dan Quayle and his wife Marilyn.

Although Clinton said that key governmental decisions rested with Congress and the executive branch, he stressed that his administration would thrive on the input of the American people.

"I ask the Congress to join with me. But no President, no Congress, no government can undertake this mission alone," Clinton said. "We have heard the trumpets. We have changed the guard. And now — each in our own way, and with God's help — we must

President Clinton greeted with cheers, optimism

WASHINGTON — A newly sworn-in President Bill Clinton got a warm reception from the hundreds of thousands who gathered at the U.S. Capitol Wednesday for the nation's inauguration ceremonies.

Cheers soared across the Capitol lawn as the Arkansas governor became president of the United States. The audience wept, clapped and sang the national anthem as Clinton took the oath of office and gave his inaugural address.

all answer the call."

The Democratic ticket's theme of change continued throughout the inaugural festivities. Clinton said that although many changes were necessary to relieve the nation's domestic woes, Leonard Wayre, a spectator from College Park, Md., said he was impressed with Clinton's 15-minute speech.

"It was very direct," he said. "I liked the fact that he was saying that Americans have to get involved and help the country and that politicians can no longer ignore the people."

New York native Saul Schachter agreed. "It was short and to the point and it sounded honest," he said.

The brevity of the address surprised those spectators who remembered some of Clinton's previous long-winded speeches.

his administration would concentrate on specific areas.

"Not change for change's sake, but change to preserve America's ideals — life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness," Clinton said. "The urgent question of

"I think people were a little worried because he has a tendency to talk a lot," said Scott Grimaldi, a Pennsylvania native who called his trip to Washington "really inspiring."

Many others also were optimistic about the upcoming Clinton administration, although not many expected instantaneous changes in policy.

"I expect Clinton to concentrate on the economy and health care," said Kevin Blair, a Richmond, Va., native. "It's not going to be anything easy, but I have confidence."

"I admire his commitment to changing the country and his sensitivity to all types of people," Wayre said. "I think he's honest about serving the entire nation. I'm going to be with him 100 percent."

Ted Hicks, a Georgetown University graduate and a Democratic Party employee, said he had met President Clinton and described him as "very gracious."

"I think he'll listen to the people," Hicks said.

Hicks added that he also had some reservations about the new administration. "I trust him as much as one can

There are no more doubters. The nation's only undefeated Division I basketball team visited the Smith Center Wednesday night before a national television audience. And No. 3 North Carolina teamed up with 21,572 frenzied fans to give Virginia a taste of just how good things are getting in Chapel Hill.

With a torrid second half, the Tar Heels pounced on the seventh-ranked Cavaliers 80-58. UNC improved to 15-1, 5-0 in the ACC, while UVa. fell to 11-1, 4-1. The Tar Heels now hold sole possession of first place in the conference.

"If we keep doing this, I think nobody is going to beat us," said UNC point guard Derrick Phelps.

Added senior forward George Lynch, "I tend to like this role, where everyone else is getting the attention and we're just sneaking in and taking what's rightfully ours."

UNC did anything but sneak by Virginia Wednesday: The Tar Heels broke through Virginia's defense by muscling inside for baskets. Centers Eric Montross and Kevin Salvadori teamed for 26 points, while senior forward George Lynch scored 12. North Carolina outrebounded Virginia 43-29, including a 20-13 margin on the offensive end.

"North Carolina showed tonight why they're a great basketball team,"

UNC alumnus, CCB chairman George Watts Hill dies at 91

Staff Report

The University and the state of North Carolina lost a bit of their history Wednesday as George Watts Hill, a former member of the UNC-system Board of Governors and chairman of the board of Central Carolina Bank, died at age 91.

Hill, whose name adorns the recently completed George Watts Hill Alumni Center, died Wednesday morning. He suffered a heart attack late last fall.

The New York City native, born on Oct. 27, 1901, was not merely a banker. He served a key role in founding Research Triangle Park, served on the Durham City Council and was a co-founder and honorary lifetime trustee of N.C. Blue Cross & Blue Shield.

Hill also oversaw Watts Hospital for many years and played a prominent role in transforming it into the N.C. School of Science and Math and Durham County Regional Hospital.

In 1984, the philanthropist was awarded North Carolina's highest honor, the N.C. Award in Public Service, for "exemplary commitment to the cause of serving his state and its citizens."

Surviving family include Hill's wife, Anne Gibson Hill; a sister, Francis Hill Fox; sons Dudley Hill Sargent and George Watts Hill; stepchildren John Hutchinson, Anne Jamison and Margaret Hart; seven grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren and one great-great grandchild.

Services for Hill will be held at 11:30 a.m. Friday at the First Presbyterian Church at 305 E. Main St. in Durham. In lieu of flowers, the family has requested donations be made to the Hill Learning Center at 3130 Pickett Road in Durham or to the charity of one's choice.

Town council to consider recall of elected officials

By Maile Carpenter

The Chapel Hill Town Council will hold a public forum tonight to discuss a draft for a bill that would enable local residents to initiate a recall of elected town officials.

Chapel Hill voters may be able to recall town council member Joe Herzenberg if the General Assembly adopts the council's proposal.

Herzenberg pleaded guilty in August to two counts of willful failure to file state taxes. Although the council passed a motion urging him to resign, Herzenberg did not step down. "Once this is passed, anybody who now holds office would be subject to the procedures," town attorney Ralph Karpinos said.

Council member Alan Rimer said last year's tax evasion charges against Herzenberg prompted the council to consider a recall provision.

"Practically speaking, this is all resulting from the situation that occurred last year," he said.

Mayor Ken Broun, who said he planned to support the bill, added that it

It's campus election time!

Yes, it's that time of year again. Time for sweaty nights in Manning Hall and the smell of campaign posters in the winter air. Time for campus elections.

Candidates for student body president, Residence Hall Association president, Carolina Athletic Association president, Senior Class president and Senior Class vice president must contact The Daily Tar Heel by 3 p.m. Jan. 25 for an interview and photo session. Come by the DTH office in Suite 104 of the Student Union any time after 3 p.m. or call Anna Griffin or Jennifer Talhelm at 962-0245.
