

Create a summer full of memories: Find a job at UNC Camp Day

By Erika Helm
Staff Writer

With summertime just around the corner, thoughts of sun and fun come to mind, not to mention finding a summer job.

Although many students might choose an indoor retail job in a crowded mall, members of UNC's leisure studies and recreation administration curriculum would like to provide a more appealing option that combines work and play.

The leisure department is sponsoring Camp Day from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. today in Great Hall. Representatives from 53 camp all along the East Coast will be looking for a few good counselors.

Laura Elliot, Camp Day co-coordinator, said the event would be a great place to find summer jobs such as lifeguarding, counseling, nursing and teaching activities.

"The good thing about this year's Camp Day is there's such a variety of camps," Elliot said. Camps that will be represented include the YMCA, Easter Seals, 4-H, Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts. Camp Day has been sponsored by the leisure department since 1986.

Deborah Bialeschki, associate professor of recreation administration, said the average camp counselor could earn from $600 to $1,000 for the summer. Salaries of counselors at private camps can range from $1,500 to $2,000.

"Most camps are looking for an enthusiastic person that works well with children and brings a little bit of experience with them," Bialeschki said. She encourages any college student who likes to spend time with children to think about getting a job at a summer camp.

"It's a people-oriented job and a place where students are in a leadership position that provides them good experience for any future career," she said. "You really become a role model for the kids. They rely on their counselors a lot to help them feel comfortable."

Elliot agreed that counselors learn important responsibilities. "Besides that, it's a lot of fun. It's such a valuable experience. You learn so many skills."

"Some of my favorite times at camp have been seeing kids experiencing their first times—seeing their first sunrise or being away from their parents for the first time. You step in as a counselor and make it a really rewarding experience for them."

Janet George, a graduate student in recreation administration, enjoyed her camp counseling experiences. "I still get letters that say, 'I love you. You're my best friend,'" she said. Elliot also still receives letters from children she counseled. "The other week I had a bad day, and I opened my mailbox, and there was a letter from a kid that really made my day."

Elliot said camp always had been an enjoyable experience growing up. "As a kid, the first thing I saw was friendship, and it was fun. It was a chance to get away from your home environment and do your own thing. You felt like you were independent."

At home, children are divided based on categories like parents' income and their intelligence, but at camp, it's a clean slate, Elliot said. The children can be who they want to be. One of the most memorable experiences George had as a counselor was a four-day primitive camping trip, she said. She supervised a group of girls ages 12-14.

"We had a ritual where you had to throw your make-up in a bag, and these girls just started bawling," George said. After that the girls were less concerned about make-up and more interested in experiencing nature.

Elliot said being a camp counselor was an experience she always would cherish. "It's one of the most rewarding things that I've done. I've learned a lot about myself."

"You have to give a lot, but you get back so much more."

Suspect sought in carjacking case

By Robert Strader

Chapel Hill police identified a possible suspect Tuesday in Friday's BP Service on East Franklin Street.

Police also found the missing vehicle.

Aaron Rodney Cotton, 17, of 106 Fifteenth St., Sanford, is the prime suspect in a joint investigation by the Chapel Hill and Sanford police departments.

"Cotton is believed to be somewhere in the Chapel Hill, Sanford or Durham areas," Chapel Hill police spokeswoman Jane Cousins said Tuesday.

Cousins said police officers in Chapel Hill and Sanford worked together and found Cotton to be their prime suspect.

The car, a black 1988 four-door Mercedes, was found in Sanford, Cousins said.

"By working with the Sanford Police Department, we were able to find the stolen car," Cousins said.

The vehicle was stolen from Barbara Wilkerson, a Hillsborough resident, who was washing her car at Walker's, which is located at 1500 E. Franklin St. in Chapel Hill.

Wilkerson's purse and $50 from her wallet were stolen, but her wallet was returned to her when she asked for it.

Wilkerson reported that the suspect then fled in the Mercedes and did not injure Wilkerson, according to Chapel Hill police reports.

Wilkerson called the police soon after the carjacking, but the suspect already had driven away by the time of officers arrived.

The incident occurred at 2:35 p.m.

LOS ANGELES—A surgical technician cut by a scalpel during an operation was awarded $102,500 on Tuesday in a lawsuit against the patient, who failed to disclose she has the virus that causes AIDS.

A Superior Court jury found that patient Jan Lustig committed fraud and negligent infliction of emotional distress on Diane Boulais.

Although Boulais has tested negative for the HIV virus so far, her lawyer told jurors she lives in fear of contracting the disease. "I am thrilled," Boulais said. "It is a message that will help all health-care workers."

Lustig's lawyer, Evan Wolfson, said the verdict would be appealed.

Boulais claimed Lustig, a clinical psychologist from Vancouver, Wash., hid her diagnosis because she knew that no surgeon would perform breast surgery on her knowing she carried the virus.

The lawsuit claims Lustig arranged for a breast reduction operation at The Breast Center in suburban Van Nuys in 1991. She signed papers saying she had no medical problems and wasn't being treated or observed for any illness.

Boulais was helping remove stitches from Lustig when a scalpel nicked her finger, cutting it deeply.

clean, positive race," he said.

Despite Clark's third place finish in the student body president election, the junior from Fuquay-Varina said he had no regrets about his campaign.

"I shall continue to strive to set a higher standard on this campus in all that I do and will still remain a familiar sight in student government," Clark said.

Clark likened his pursuit of the highest office in student government to Ross Perot's bid for the presidency last fall.

"If necessary, I will become the Perot of politics on this campus because I believe my platform affects the students on this campus, and maybe the votes didn't show that, but I don't think that anyone can disagree," he said.

Clark said he thought his strong finish in the two South Campus districts—Ehringhaus and Morrison—showed the character of that area's voters.

"I am very proud of my home district," Clark said. "I am proud they stood by me tonight."

Ginsberg, who finished fourth, said the campaign had been a good experience and was something he would remember.

"It was definitely worth it," he said. "I had a great time. If I had it to do again, I would."

Ginsberg faulted his loss to low voter turnout among his supporters. About 2,730 people voted in the student body president race this year, as opposed to about 3,100 last year.

"A large part of campus election is getting people out to vote," Ginsberg said. "We had a small number of hard-working people working for us."

Ginsberg, who did not endorse a candidate, praised the finalists and called on students to study the two closely.

"I believe the candidates that are remaining will provide extremely strong leadership for the University next year," he said. "But I urge students to get out and study the candidates, their stands on issues, before they vote."

Adrian Patillo, who did not attend

Eric

"Who doesn't love Eric?" she said, calling the Montross turnout primarily a "protest vote."

The fourth, fifth and sixth-place finishers also felt the sting of Montross' political juggernaut.

"I'm just glad it wasn't Natrone Means," said Kevin "Cooter" Ginsberg, who finished fourth.

The campus' newest political sensation was unavailable for comment Tuesday. Instead of spending the evening watching election results in Manning 209, Montross waited out the returns playing ball with a few friends.

Unlike Montross, the Tar Heels won Tuesday night, defeating Maryland 77-63. Montross did, however, capture Player of the Game honors, scoring 17 points and grabbing 17 rebounds.

"Montross did look a little nervous in the second half," said DTH Assistant Sports Editor Carter Toole. "We thought it could have been the election."

MY DEGREE GOT ME THE INTERVIEW.
ARMY ROTC GOT ME THE JOB.

Things got pretty competitive for this job. I'm sure my college degree and good grades kept me in the running. But in the end it was the leadership and management experience I got through Army ROTC that won them over.

Army ROTC taught me responsibility, self-discipline and leadership. Those are things you just can't learn from a textbook.

I don't know where I'd be right now if I hadn't enrolled in Army ROTC, but I do know one thing for sure...I wouldn't be here.
