Black Student Movement President Michelle Thomas said black graduation rates could be improved if the campus were more receptive to black students.

"We need to create a more positive and diverse climate (for black students)," she said. "The recruitment of more black faculty and the construction of a freestanding black cultural center would help in the retention and recruiting of black students."

The Board of Trustees this year will consider plans for a free-standing BCC and vote on whether to approve its con-

The AAU report was not the first to reveal the discrepancy between black and white four-year UNC graduation

Moody

Last summer, Charles Sykes, a re-searcher with the John Locke Foundation, discovered a similar racial trend at the University.

Sykes' research indicated that 62 percent of UNC's white student body graduated in four years compared to only 39 percent of black students. The rates were slightly better for five-year graduates, with whites and blacks graduating at rates of 75 percent and 53.3 percent respectively.

Sykes blamed UNC admissions policies for the discrepancy and recom-mended that UNC-system leaders reevaluate admissions policies for blacks and other minorities.

Lagging black four-year graduation rates were not restricted to UNC.

At the University of California at Los Angeles, only 14 percent of its black students graduated in four years.
UCLA, one of the most ethnically diverse public universities in the United States, has 47 percent minority students. In 1992, the University of Maryland produced only 286 black four-year Statistics such as these have both raised concern and forced administrations and students around the country to wonder if the current climate of American collegiate studies is compatible with the needs of black and minority stu-

"It's a very valuable lecture series, and it's particularly gratifying to have such important and eloquent speakers here at Carolina."

Moody did not

Moody did not return phone messages Sunday.

Ramaswamy said that the series of lectures cost about $50,000 and that it took six months to raise the funds.

Student government officials raised the money and received funding from Chancellor Paul Hardin, Student Congress, the Office of the Provost, the vice chancellor of health affairs and the College of Arts and Sciences to pay for the lectures, Ramaswamy said.

"I think this is the most money students have raised ever," she said.

The first speaker, Arthur Schlesinger Jr., is a well-known historian and served as special assistant to former President John F. Kennedy. Schlesinger will speak at 8 p.m. today in Hill Hall auditorium.

Schlesinger's most recent book "The Disuniting of America: Reflections on a Multicultural Society," examines the country's racial polarization and ethnic violence from a historical point of view

Tuesday, Dinesh D'Souza, author of "Illiberal Education," and Gerald Graff, professor of English and education at the University of Chicago and co-founder of Teachers for a Democratic Culture, will debate the issues of politi-cal correctness, multiculturalism and preferential treatment for minorities at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.
Ramaswamy said the debate between D'Souza and Graff would present a liberal and conservative viewpoint.

"The whole purpose is to get both sides," she said. "Here's a chance for students to hear both sides of the issue and make their own decisions."

D'Souza has said admission policies giving preferential treatment to minorities weakens educational standards and encourages separatism.

But Graff has argued that such attacks on multiculturalism and political correctness were signs of paranoia

McCormick said the subject of the debate was very timely. "The issues concerning multiculturalism in relation to the university is right at the center of what's on our minds today," he said.
Wednesday, a panel will discuss topics centering around race relations on campus, in the world of academia and in American society at 8 p.m. in the George Watts Hill Alumni Center. Los Angeles Times writer Sam

Fulwood, author of "The Rage of the Black Middle Class;" Linda Chavez, former chairwoman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission; and Molefi Kete Asante, chairman of Temple University's African-American studies department and a leading Afrocentrist, will lead the discussion.

Lynne Cheney, former chairwoman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, will talk Thursday on the effect of speech codes on higher educations of the control of the c tion at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Lydia Lindsey, a visiting African-American studies professor from N.C.
Central University, said the University could take steps to increase the black graduation rate and create a more positive environment for the black or increase.

tive environment for the black students. "We can increase the graduates by first identifying specific problems which black students are having and then tak-ing direct action to address them," she said. "But first, we need to clearly identify academic and social problems

Thomas and Lindsey said building the BCC was one of the biggest steps the University could take to create a better climate for blacks at UNC.
