Carolina NORML Plans Concert To Raise Funds, Attract Members

BY LISA ROBBINS
STAFF WRITER

Carolina NORML, the UNC branch of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, will have a benefit concert Oct. 20 to obtain funds and membership, the group announced Monday night.

The new organization, which has about 45 members, hopes to attract new members and gain monetary support through the concert at The Islands on Franklin Street.

The concert will include performances by Brother Junebug, Section 8, DSF, Voodoo Birds, and the Kleeds, who have all said they would participate at no cost to NORML.

Money raised from the concert — as well as funding from sponsorships — will help the organization with operational expenses.

Elections also were held at the Monday meeting held in Murphey Hall. About 30 people attended the meeting.

President Kevin Whiteacre, Vice President Bryan Rapp, Secretary Josh Tewell, and Treasurer Sonya Arsenen are NORML's new officers.

NORML members also discussed upcoming activities such as Medical Marijuana Day, a day that is dedicated to discussing the legalization of marijuana for medicinal use, and campus speeches by well-known speakers who may visit the University.

"We don't try to pass off marijuana as harmless. But it should be your right to smoke it just like it's your right to have a scotch and soda."

KEVIN WHITEACRE
Carolina NORML president

Whiteacre, a senior from Dallas, Texas, mentioned some of the issues that NORML has faced throughout the past few weeks as the organization has received growing publicity.

He addressed an attack made against NORML by a student in a letter to the editor in the Sept. 22 issue of The Daily Tar Heel.

"Articles like this (one) aren't worth answering," Whiteacre said Monday. "The only fact he got right was that the hemp plant has a variety of economic uses. The rest is nothing but slander and name-calling."

Whiteacre said NORML, which is trying to establish itself as an official student organization, is in favor of regulating marijuana in the same manner alcohol is regulated.

"We don't try to pass off marijuana as harmless," he said. "But it should be your right to smoke it just like it's your right to have a scotch and soda."

Carolina NORML member Jon Wexler, a sophomore from Deer Park, N.Y., said he originally supported the issue of legalizing marijuana as an environmental issue, but now supports the entire drug issue as well.

"(There is) the fact that alcohol is legal; either you have both or you have neither," he said.

"They tried alcohol prohibition and that didn't work. I think this year we can definitely raise awareness."

The organization already has started meeting goals that it discussed last semester at an interest meeting, said Rapp, a junior from Jamestown.

These goals include heightening awareness of the facts about marijuana, active involvement with local legislators and starting a letter-writing campaign, Rapp said Monday.

NORML members also plan to put reports about marijuana legalization on reserve at the Undergraduate Library for students to read and learn more about the issue.

Whiteacre said he hoped students will take the organization and its cause seriously.

When NORML first set up an information booth in the Pit along with other organizations, "everyone would double-take my sign and four out of five would snicker," Whiteacre said.

"Isn't that a hoot? The potheads getting active." But there's nothing funny about it.
