Keep it in Perspective

BY JUSTIN SCHEEF SPORTSATURDAY EDITOR

Despite losing so many starters to graduation and injuries, UNC is trying to fulfill rising expectations

Expectations are never met.

They are always too high or too low, but never directly on target.

In the case of the 1994 North Carolina football team, it's really hard to tell which Has this team underachieved? Or has it overachieved?

Which way you see it depends upon your perspective: fans and the media or coaches.

The team has failed to put up the same numbers it did last year and lost for the second consecutive season in Charlottesville. The Johnson & Johnson tandem has failed to run for the yards it did in 1993.

From the fans' standpoint, the Tar Heels have had a disappointing season. The Peach Bowl, which people went bonkers over in 1992, is no longer good

To the UNC coaching staff, however, this team is a smashing success. It is a tribute to the program's level of recruiting and coaching.

The squad lost 14 of 22 starters to graduation. That was before the injuries. Now mark off four more starters - right guard Scott Overbeck, split end Gray Bovender, cornerback Tim Smith and most recently, offensive lineman Pat Conneely

The first three were lost for the year in a one-week span in the preseason. Conneely has played this season, but the games he lost to injury, combined with other various lesser injuries on the offensive line have created numerous prob-

The graduation losses mixed in with the injuries left North Carolina with two very inexperienced positions - offensive line and the secondary.

Both have been scrutinized this year, but as the season comes to a close, the players at those positions are improving and the future looks bright.

The offensive line is controlling the line of scrimmage almost as well as last year's edition.

The Maryland and N.C. State games have been a case in point. Especially against the Wolfpack, where redshirt freshmen Jeff Saturday and Mike Hobgood showed that they were ready

How far has Hobgood moved up the depth chart? In August he wasn't even listed on it. The UNC media guide said that he will be "competing for playing time at right guard." Playing time? He's starting these days.

The much-maligned secondary has faced similar problems. Jimmy Hitchcock was supposed to play free safety this year, but Smith's injury forced him to move back to the corner.

Then Hitchcock went down, leaving only one returning starter in the defensive backfield, strong safety Sean Boyd. Omar Brown, Terry Billups and Reggie Love got a chance to prove themselves a year earlier than expected. This will ease the transition next year.

Even though Hitchcock returned after only missing two games, it has been a year of learning for the young defensive backs. After giving up the big play to opponents most of the year, last week the Tar Heels practically shut out N.C. State's Eddie Goines, one of the nation's top deep

All this bodes well for the future. With these young players getting a chance to prove themselves this year, it should provide UNC with unbelievable depth in the 1995 campaign.

But it is still 1994 and some expectations are still unfulfilled. When trying to decide whether North Carolina has over or under achieved, just keep it in perspec-

RANDOM THOUGHTS

Duke's undefeated run was kind of fun while it lasted. It was like cheering on a high school team.... This goal post tearing down epidemic is just plain stupid. But you have to give credit to the athletic department for installing new fan-resistant, bend-but-don't-break goal posts.
