Longer Ticketing Hours Mean More Parking Horrors on Campus

UNC Police will now monitor some meters until 9 p.m. instead of 5 p.m.

BY CARL E. WEAVER
 STAFF WRITER

Students trying to gain access to parking for evening classes and University events will be forced to compete for fewer free parking spaces or else pay the fee for metered spaces.
 The University Department of Transportation and Parking has adopted a new parking policy, which requires the ticketing of metered parking spaces on campus until 9 p.m. This is a change from the 5 p.m. cutoff time students enjoyed during previous semesters.

 The new policy began Aug. 14, Randy Young of the DTP said Thursday. Young also said notices were posted on Aug. 11, alerting students and faculty to the changes.
 The new parking regulations, which will be up for review in the spring of 1996, are an effort by the DTP to ensure that the spaces are used for short-term parking only.
 "This is an issue of equity," Young said, not a punitive measure. Young said the DTP was trying to enforce proper and intended usage of the metered spaces.
 Young also said this was not an effort to generate extra revenue, and the DTP was not looking at a significant increase in staff to enforce the measure.
 "I wish there was more parking," said

Becki Gales, a student in Public Health.
 Gales said she did not mind paying to park in the evening, but was concerned with the time limit on the meters outside the Student Union building. She said she thought it would encourage people to park further away from the building for evening events and cause people to walk in the dark across campus to get to their cars, a practice that freshman orientation specifically discourages, Gales added.
 Parking meters along West Drive, located near UNC Hospitals, were not affected and are still being monitored 24 hours a day. Spaces by Morehead Planetarium will continue to be monitored from 7:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 1 p.m. until 10 p.m. on Sundays.
