IM-Rec Kicks Off Semester With Fall Intramural Sports

BY MICHELLE CRAMPTON

For those students who are interested in playing sports but might not have the time, the drive or the skills to participate on varsity athletic teams, the alternative can often be found in an intramural or club

The Intramural Recreational Department at UNC offers intramural sports teams and sports clubs, as well as informal recreation programs, fitness and aerobics sessions. All are open to the students, faculty and staff of the Uniquesity.

Marty Pomerantz, director of IM-Rec, described the differences between club and intramural sports, two of the department's most popular activities. "Those involved in intramurals want to be involved in a ague in tournament-type play," Pomerantz said. 'It's generally a short-term involvement, and they sign with a group of students they want to play with.

"The sports clubs are for those who want to take a particular sport to the next level. They compete with clubs on other campuses, so they get to travel. It's a level of play between intramurals and varsity sports."

Popular fall intramural sports offered by the department range from traditional activities such as soccer, arena and flag football, and team tennis, to unusual sports like inner-tube water basketball, frisbee disc golf -tube water basketball, frisbee disc golf id wallyball. Approximately 30 different sports are fered as intramurals each semester. There are men's, omen's and coed divisions at the intramural level.

Students involved in intramural sports said events gave them many opportunities to socialize, exercise and have fun. Edward Yun, a sophomore from

Asheville who participates in intramural soccer, said he thought intramurals give students something to do.
"It really lets you be more involved, rather than sitting around doing nothing," Yun said. "It also gives you a release from stress and helps you meet new people."
Meridyth Park, a freshman from Greensboro who participates in the mini-soccer intramural event, said she agreed. "When you play other teams you really get to know other people," she said. "Some of the girls are girls from my hall. I'm getting to know them better when we get to interact with each other (as a team)."

The IM-Rec department will also include a new outdoor recreation center, located at the old tennis center off Country Club Road. The outdoor program center off Country Club Road. The outdoor program will include a ropes training course, a 20-foot high obstacle course, a traditional golf green complete with sand traps and open spaces for other outdoor sports.
