

Kruse, Berg Get Extended Breathers As Volleyball Tames 'Cats in 3 Games

BY KURT TONDORF
STAFF WRITER

The UNC volleyball team fought off jet lag, fatigue and a feisty opponent by beating Davidson 15-7, 15-10, 15-2 Monday.

The victory was the Tar Heels' fifth in seven matches this season, and their 5-2 record looks impressive when compared with a 1-6 start last season.

The road-weary Tar Heels had just returned from a successful weekend tournament at Miami of Ohio, where they won two of three matches. Unfortunately, the team couldn't afford to rest against the visiting Wildcats, who put up a strong fight in the first two sets before getting pummeled in the third.

Fourteen players contributed to a balanced UNC attack, led by freshmen Alicia Alford (seven kills) and Lindsay Smith. Smith tallied six kills and made no errors in her nine attacks for a phenomenal .667 hitting percentage.

Only three players appeared in all three games for the Tar Heels, and senior Kristin Kruse was given the night off by her coach, Joe Sagula.

"We had to rest Kristin tonight," Sagula said. "She has knees that need rest, and the more we can rest her early in the year, the better off she'll play later on."

UNC stymied Davidson from the beginning, running wild on the Wildcats for 10 consecutive points and a 10-1 first-game lead. Smith, Maya Starks and Amber Willey provided most of the offense as UNC squashed a 6-1 Davidson run to win the opener.

In the second set, the UNC coaching staff did a little more experimenting. Freshman Erin Berg, the only true setter on the Tar Heel squad, was replaced by junior defensive specialist Ashley Powers near the end of the first game. Powers, who had a personal-best 13 assists against Davidson last season, provided UNC with 11 assists and some much-needed pine time for Berg.

"I thought Ashley Powers did a great job," Sagula said. "I think her passers need to do a better job for her in that position. It was more of an experiment than anything else, and Erin needed the rest."

The change in UNC's attack led to sloppy play in the second stanza. Davidson battled the Tar Heels step by step, and it appeared as if the Wildcats would tie the match at a game each.

With the score tied at nine and Davidson pushing the Tar Heels to play their best, UNC's focus returned. Willey came off the bench to deliver a kill that had Wildcat players scrambling for safety, and its momentum carried the Tar Heels through the final two games. They dominated the Wildcats by winning 18 of the final 21 points.

Next weekend's matches will offer the Tar Heels little respite. Texas A&M, fresh off a thrilling five-game victory over top-ranked Stanford, will visit Carmichael Auditorium on Friday night, followed by perennial powerhouse LSU on Saturday.

NBA Players Vote Today on Union Decertification

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
NEW YORK — Will Michael Jordan's decertification effort carry the day, or will his NBA colleagues back their union and a new labor deal? The answer will come today when players' votes are counted.

But even that won't necessarily be the end of the NBA's tangled labor dispute. What happens next — and how longer the lockout continues — will be determined by who wins and by how much.

"We believe we've won," said Jeffrey Kessler, the lawyer representing Jordan, Patrick Ewing and other players pushing to disband the union.

"I think it will be a real revelation to people," said Simon Gourdin, the union's executive director. "But the losers are likely to challenge the election results, erecting legal roadblocks that could delay the opening of training camp on Oct. 6 and drag on past Nov. 3, when the season is scheduled to start."

Votes in the election to determine whether the NBA players' association will continue to represent the players will be counted publicly by National Labor Relations Board officials this afternoon.

In balloting on Aug. 30 and Sept. 7, players cast their votes in large numbers, the turnout believed to benefit the union.

A vote for retaining the union was considered a vote for a proposed labor agreement, one many players said they cast reluctantly. If the union wins the election, 21 of the league's 27 player representatives must still formally ratify the new deal Wednesday at a meeting in Chicago.

The margin of the win could determine how the player reps vote. In June, they killed a proposed agreement by tabling a vote.

However, union leaders have said they expect the deal to be ratified this time.

"Our expectation is if the union has a clear victory in the voting next week, we will ask the owners to ratify it and end the lockout," NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik said.

After casting his vote last week, Jordan didn't seem inclined to continue his fight for dissolving the union if the players vote against it.

"If (decertification) doesn't carry, then the players have spoken their minds, and that's all I ask," Jordan said.
