

SRC, Pool May Reap Rewards From Surplus Money

■ A student referendum could earmark $1.2 million for repairs and renovations.

The Student Recreation Center, still closed after last month's flooding, might receive over a million dollars in windfall funds to be used for repairs and improvements.

Student Body President Calvin Cunningham said he planned to propose a resolution to Student Congress which would free up $1.2 million for SRC projects.

This money is available for use because the original construction costs of the SRC were less than projected.

"We've got money and projects coming down the pipeline," Cunningham said.

to renovate Navy swimming pool, located behind Carmichael Residence Hall. The pool needs new tile and extensive repairs to its drainage system.

The money could also be funneled toward fixing and replacing flood-damaged equipment.

The SRC's lower level sustained significant damage on Aug. 27 and 28 when 12 inches of rainwater poured into the lobby and main workout room. Carpeting and exercise equipment were covered in mud and electrically-powered cardiovascular machines sustained damage.

Students who frequented the lower level of the SRC have been forced to seek alternatives to their normal workout. The Spa Health Club at Village Plaza has been a solution for many people, offering free temporary memberships to UNC students and faculty. The weight machines in Woollen Gym have also been available for student use.

Relief came this Monday when the upper level of the SRC, which contains treadmills and other exercise equipment, reopened for student use. The upper level is also offering a full schedule of aerobics classes.

While lines have not been very long, students seem to be aware that they have the option of using the upper level, according to SRC staff member Ken Bates.

"The facility has been fairly well-used throughout the day, and the Woollen Gym also," Bates said.

Cunningham said the resolution, if passed, would probably be put forth in a referendum with several other issues, and students could expect a verdict around Oct. 10.

very powerful at this school," Williams said.

Robinson said he had levied accusations of racism against campus police. He said a uniformed campus police officer sought him out and harassed him last year after he contacted the officer's fiancée regarding a student government matter.

"His tone was extremely negative and condescending and threatening towards the end of the conversation," he said. Robinson later brought the incident to the attention of the dean of the film school and the head of campus security.

Robinson said that NCSA needs to recruit more minority faculty and students. "I'm a little bit more sensitive to that because I'm African American," he said.

According to Robinson, NCSA employed only one African-American faculty member out of a total of 101 instructors last year. Johnson said that there were "less than five" African-American faculty members this year.

The art school recently hired a black instructor in the dance department to replace one of two faculty members who resigned in July over allegations of sexual misconduct.

However, none of the General Studies instructors are black, Robinson said. "On our campus, 90 percent of the maintenance and kitchen staff is African American," he said. "That doesn't sit right."

Williams said he was concerned that minorities do not have role models on the faculty to counteract the bias of ethnocentric instructors. "If you paint the image of only one particular group being artists, then you're going to damage the students," he said.

"We clearly need to have a higher presence of African-American faculty," Johnson said. "This is something we would want to look into."

Williams said that recruitment of minorities also needs to improve, especially in inner cities. "Black students don't want to come here if they're going to be only one in five," he said.

Only two students in the School of Film-making are black, he said. Forty-four of the 644 students enrolled at NCSA last year were black.

Robinson said that he expects these issues to be addressed by NCSA administrators. "I honestly believe that our chancellor is more than willing to help," he said.

Williams disagreed, however. "The dean (of student affairs) is the only one I trust to take an issue and follow through with it and really get to the bottom of it," he said.

Classes at the Winston-Salem school begin today.

Embassy spokesman Richard Hoagland called the attack "an isolated act" and said it "will have no impact on the Russian-American relations."

In Washington, the State Department said President Clinton was briefed on the attack, which came just a day after the Kremlin accused NATO of genocide against the Bosnian Serbs, Russia's historic allies.

It also came on the eve of a visit to Moscow by Deputy Secretary Strobe Talbott, charged with trying to heal the widening rift between Washington and Moscow.

Hoagland said the grenade exploded inside a large photocopying machine, absorbing most of the shock. The small room was empty at the time, he said.

"There were no warning calls," Hoagland said. "As of now, no one has claimed responsibility."

Hoagland said a spent grenade launcher, a black ski mask and a glove were found across the ring road. Police said the launcher was lying inside an archway leading to a tree-covered courtyard that may have been the escape route. Some Russian media reports said the attacker escaped in a waiting car.

Glass, shrapnel and what looked like the rocket-propelled grenade's tail littered the pavement outside the embassy.

"Most likely it was an anti-tank grenade," said Moscow Civil Defense commander Col. Ivan Chigogidze.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said someone was using the copy machine five minutes before the explosion.

"They could have been killed," he said. Interior Ministry commandos, police and embassy guards cordoned off the area.

The embassy's Marine guards, armed with automatic rifles and machine guns, stood guard. Bomb-sniffing police dogs were also on the scene.

For the Record

In the Mon., Sept. 11 Police Roundup, The Daily Tar Heel printed an incorrect police report. The police report incorrectly identified Scottie Edwards as the arrested suspect. Edwards was never arrested or charged.

In the Wed., Sept. 13 article "ASG Fights Student Aid Reductions," John Dervin was incorrectly identified as ASG vice chancellor for student affairs. Dervin is vice president for student affairs.

The DTH regrets the errors.

Alcohol Law Enforcement Investigating Charges Against Agent After Crackdown

■ The ALE plans to continue the crackdown against underage drinking although complaints were filed against one agent.

Despite allegations of harassment against an Alcohol Law Enforcement officer and an ongoing internal investigation into the matter, the ALE maintains that strict enforcement of all underage drinking laws will continue.

John Simmons, ALE district supervisor, said there were plans to implement the Cops-N-Shops program again in the near future.

The program focuses on underage purchase and possession of alcohol.

"It is an ongoing effort to make sure individuals are complying with the law," Simmons said.

Simmons said the ALE-sponsored programs were not conducted to specifically target UNC students, but to ensure that all alcohol-related laws were abided by.

"We are not out to target the students, but to ensure that business runs in accordance with the law," Simmons said.

Following the last Cops-N-Shops weekend, two UNC students filed a citizen's complaint against Christopher Waters, the ALE agent who stopped them.

"There is an internal investigation being conducted," Simmons said. He said neither he nor Waters could comment on the investigation at this time.

ALE agents and Chapel Hill Police officers worked together to crack down on such violations.

In the past, agents and officers have conducted weekend surveillances of area stores.

The last time this program was conducted was the first weekend after classes began. Two students claimed they were unjustly searched and harassed.

Juniors Xavier Chakravarti and Anders Lyndrup were stopped during the weekend of August 26 and asked if they had purchased alcohol.

The students said that they had not, but ALE agents still searched the trunk of their car. The agent searched the trunk and found a six-pack of soft drinks and a can of food.

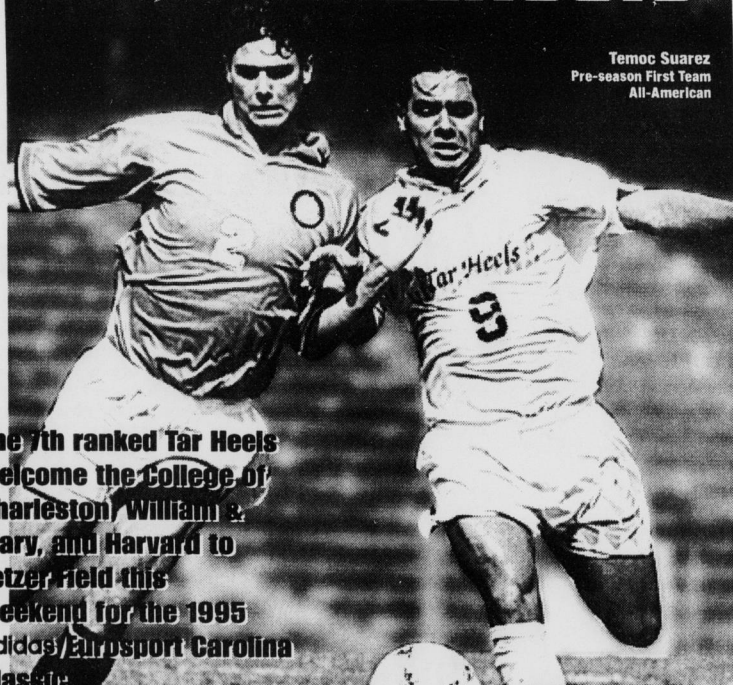

Lyndrup and Chakravarti filed a citizen's complaint against the agent who stopped them because they felt Simmons had singled them out.

"We both got a ticket from him one time, and now I think he is singling people out," Lyndrup said. "There was absolutely no proof of us doing anything wrong."
