

BRIEFS
Stories from the University and Chapel Hill

Day To Celebrate "Paris of the Piedmont" Canceled

The first annual Carrboro Day, which was to be held Saturday at the Carrboro Town Hall, was canceled due to the rain. The day will be rescheduled sometime this spring.

Carol Rosemond, event coordinator, said because the day was planned almost entirely by the residents of Carrboro, canceling the event was a hard decision to make. "They worked real hard, so there was a lot of disappointment."

Rosemond said a resident of Carrboro summed up the feelings of the day when she said, "My heart tells me one thing, but my mind tells me we should cancel."

The day was intended to celebrate the uniqueness that the town of Carrboro is known for having and to promote a sense of community among those who live and work in the town.

University that we move on this."

But, Armfield said despite the opposition on campus, he felt passing the proposal was necessary to maintain the excellence of the University.

"We hope we're being good stewards to the state and to the students," Armfield said.

Several students who had been active in the fight against the tuition increase said now the legislature had to be pushed in the upcoming short session and the long session to give more funding to the University.

"Obviously we have to live with the vote," said Kim Miller, president of the Graduate and Professional Student Federation. "Now it is important to hold them to their promise."

John Dervin, one of the students who addressed the Board during its Sept. 7

"We want to bring everybody together with a sense of community," said Eleanor Kinnaird, mayor of Carrboro. "We have the advantage of being a small town, and this makes for more of a sense of togetherness."

Kuralt Cancels Speech After Being Hospitalized

Organizers of the Johnston Scholars Issues Forum were disappointed Sunday when keynote speaker Charles Kuralt was forced to cancel his 7:30 p.m. speech after being hospitalized.

Eleanor Morris, director of UNC's Office of Scholarships and Student Aid, said she had spoken to Kuralt's wife early Sunday when she called to inform her that he would be unable to attend the event.

"He was taken to the hospital with chest pains. He's OK. It does not appear to be a heart attack," Morris said.

Kuralt's wife told Morris she was hopeful that he would be out of the hospital very soon.

Morris said that Kuralt's cancellation would not dampen the week's schedule of events, which will focus on, "Media and the Mind: Shaping the Political and Ethical Consensus in America."

"It was disappointing that we couldn't start off the week with Charles Kuralt's talk, but we still have a very exciting week, with events planned every day from Monday through Friday," Morris said.

hearing to gather student opinion on the issue, said no matter what the monetary rewards in the legislature were, they were not worth the precedent set by the vote.

"I think even if we end up getting money in the short session, which I really hope we do, we have still set a horrible precedent," he said. "I wouldn't want to be a freshman."

Both Miller and Dervin said they were disappointed with Cunningham's leadership on the issue.

"I have a problem with Calvin still holding that stance, based on student opinion," Miller said.

"He's not here as Calvin the person, he is here as Calvin the representative of students, and I feel he's failed in this responsibility."

Ladell Robbins, president of the BSM, said he thought the vote had come about too quickly, but he said he hoped the legislature would act to increase the University's funding.

"It's a done deal," Robbins said. "Now I only hope that the state legislature will be as supportive to them as they are to the state legislature."

Ministry, Not Competition, Inspires Campus Christian Groups' Recruiting

Members of IVCF, FCA and Campus Crusade say they share a common goal.

BY ANGELA EAGLE
STAFF WRITER

While an editorial cartoon in The Daily Tar Heel depicted them as opposing armies in the battle to win freshmen over to their organizations, the University's on-campus Christian groups said the image of strife between the groups was not accurate.

In fact, competition isn't the word any of the campus Christian organizations would use to describe their relationship with one another.

"It's not Christian 'rush,'" said Alex Kirk, the president of IntersVarsity Christian Fellowship's South Chapter. "We joked around when the cartoon was out. We try not to make it that way. We have a good relationship with Crusade. I don't feel like we're competing in any way. I feel like we're both working towards the same goal."

Working to reach the campus through

Jesus Christ was the goal of every Christian organization on campus, said Beth Randolph, a staff member of Campus Crusade for Christ.

"We like to see all the Christian groups on campus as a part of the Body of Christ," Randolph said. "We're very glad that they're here, because certainly we couldn't reach the campus through Christ without them."

While Campus Crusade and IntersVarsity seem to get a lot of the attention, another group takes part in the Christian student sweepstakes as well.

"We're not a very high-profile organization," said Lindsey Williams, vice president of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. "I think something that's unique about FCA, that separates it from the other two organizations, is that it's totally student-led."

Williams agreed that there wasn't a spirit of competition between the different groups on campus. "If someone decides to go to IntersVarsity or Crusade instead of FCA, that's not a loss at all," he said. "All Christian groups have a unity in purpose, and that's just that (students) have the opportunity to get involved."

The different organizations did seem to prefer their members be involved exclusively in one group. "I'd say we encourage people to pick a family and stick with it," Kirk said. "IntersVarsity feels good about (students) getting involved in any Christian organization on campus."

Randolph said commitment to a single organization was better for the individual as well. "We very much encourage people after the first year or so to be involved in one organization and really be focused on that one, because it's much more valuable than being spread so thin that you can only give 10 percent," she said.

IntersVarsity differs from the other groups in that it is divided into four chapters. "If all 400 of us got together every week, people would fall through the cracks," Kirk said. "We want to care for people and for people to feel like they're cared for. This school is big enough."

And Randolph said UNC was big enough to handle IntersVarsity, Campus Crusade and FCA. "Because the campus is so large, I think there's a place for both of us on campus," Randolph said. "Certainly we are behind what they're doing, and we feel their support also."

thereafter, the automatic fire alarm went off. The residents of Old West had been evacuated from the building and the fire was extinguished before Dunn arrived at the scene.

First-floor resident assistant Daren Brake said he thought the fire department's response was as prompt as it could have been. "Before we could get everyone out of the dorm, the fire was already extinguished," Brake said. "There could have been more damage, if they hadn't been so quick."

John Mendoza-Brodeur, area director for Old West, could not be reached for comment.

Police reports have estimated the damages at $2000. However, none of the washing or dryer machines were damaged. The laundry facilities are still open for student use.

DJ for the event is from Kenya, and traditional Kenyan food will be served. Admission is $8.

On Sunday night, live bands are usually scheduled. Razor Posse from Richmond, Va. played on Sept. 10, and local artist Mickey Mills and Steele played on Sept. 24. Musa said most of the live bands played reggae music. Musa said the dance floor was packed most weekends, and dancers often spilled outside to fill the patio.

The music and the restaurant are both part of the Seeds of Sheba project, which aims to bring out a community awareness of African-American culture through the arts and various workshops.

Along with dancing, guests can also enjoy food and drink between songs. The club offers a full menu of vegetarian and meat dishes from around the Caribbean and Africa. Guests can savor delicacies like a West Indian curry goat roti while sipping on a Jamaican Ginger Beer.

Musa said the club was open to all ages and that the cover price, which varied according to the entertainment, was usually inexpensive.
