

WUNC Nears $350,000 Fund-Raising Goal

Despite complaints about program changes, the radio station has raised $336,000.

Although WUNC Radio has been criticized for recent programming changes, the station raised $336,000 in a week-long fund-raising drive that ended Wednesday. Beginning Oct. 26, the station's goal was to raise $350,000. WUNC Development Director Regina Yeager said 4,000 people called during the actual event and pledged $333,000. Listeners have continued to call the station since the drive has ended, bringing the station closer to its final goal.

General Manager Bill Davis said he was pleased with the amount of money raised, even though the station did not reach its goal. "This is the second best fund raiser we've done," he said. "For us to have this level of success is really a testament to the generosity of our listeners."

Organizers said a fund raiser earlier this year may account for the $14,000 shortfall. The station may have not reached its goal this fall because people who normally make donations may have made them in the spring, he said. In the spring WUNC raised $250,000 although its goal was $180,000.

Davis said this was the first time the station had held a fund raiser in the spring. Yeager said technical problems at the station may have prevented some people from calling. "We're having problems with our antenna so people in many areas aren't getting our signal."

In order to raise money, the station had special guests, including Chancellor Michael Hooker, appeal for pledges on the air.

The station managed to raise the money in spite of complaints about changes in the station's programming.

A program called "Talk of the Nation" now kicks off a five-hour block of talk programming beginning each afternoon at 3 p.m. Before the change, the station played classical and jazz in the late afternoon. The amount of jazz music played has been cut, and clips of classical pieces are played instead of complete pieces.

Chuck Stone, professor of the School of Journalism and Mass Communication, said he disliked the programming changes. "I'm looking for music when I'm driving," he said. "I can get the talk from the newspaper."

However Stone's colleague Michael Williams, assistant professor of journalism, said he liked the additional news. "I'm glad they've got the extending coverage because I can catch more of it now."

School of Education Dean To Step Down Next June

BY MARVA HINTON

A search committee formed this week will soon start a national search for a new dean of the UNC School of Education.

Donald Stedman, the current dean, is resigning his post effective July 1 after serving as the school's dean since 1990.

"I will be 65 next year, and I think the school is doing well," Stedman said. "There are some other things I want to do."

Stedman will be working with U.S. Secretary of Education Richard Riley during the fall of 1996, and he plans to work in Australia and New Zealand researching their children's services programs. Stedman said he planned to return to UNC to teach and do research sometime in 1997.

Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Lawrence Gilbert has formed the 14-member search committee which includes faculty, local educators and two students, one graduate and one undergraduate. Joseph Farrell, a professor in the Institute of Government, will chair the committee. The committee has yet to meet.

William Ware, a professor in the School of Education and a member of the search committee, said he was excited to be on the committee. "It's going to be an exciting committee, and we will be doing an important job especially now that the University is going through a hard time with the legislature," he said.

Gilbert said the chancellor was anxious for the committee to begin its search. He said the committee was waiting for permission from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to advertise for the position. "We're looking for someone who is an expert in the field of education, someone who has experience in researching and teaching and hopefully, someone with administrative experience also," he said. "We want someone with national prominence."

After the list of candidates has been narrowed down, they will be invited to visit UNC. The candidates will be interviewed by the search committee and the administration. The chancellor will make the final decision. If the committee is unable to find a dean by July 1, Stedman has agreed to keep working until January 1997.

Former NOW Leader Launches Rape Awareness Week

The annual event includes discussion forums and a Take Back the Night March.

While the national attention given to domestic violence in the wake of the O.J. Simpson trial and to sexual harassment following the 1991 Senate testimony of Anita Hill has increased awareness of these problems, society still tends to neglect these issues, said Dana Jones, student government's women's issues coordinator.

To increase awareness of these issues, UNC will hold its annual Rape Awareness Week today through Thursday. The week, sponsored by student government, the Women's Issues Forum and People Organized for Women's Empowerment and Rights, will feature a variety of events including luncheon forums, panel discussions and presentations.

"(The goal of the week is) to go beyond rape awareness — to incorporate awareness about issues that go on around campus all the time, and to point out subjects that are often overlooked, such as sexual harassment," Jones said.

The week kicks off today with a speech by Eleanor Smeal, former president of the National Organization for Women and co-founder of the Feminist Majority.

"Smeal, an alumna of Duke, was very interested in speaking to the campus, so we thought we would incorporate her into the event," Jones said.

Wednesday's Take Back the Night March, which begins in the Pit, will be the highlight of the week's events. The march symbolizes women's empowerment and unity in dealing with issues such as discrimination and harassment, Jones said.

While the entire event is a joint effort between various student groups, organizers have relied heavily on UNC faculty and services at the University such as Student Health Service, Jones said.

"Faculty, such as the women's studies department, have been really helpful in getting contacts and support for Rape Awareness Week," Jones said. "Through this event, we hope to incorporate the entire community, as well as the campus, in increasing awareness."

Throughout the week, forums will focus on issues that affect both women on campus and in society.

"With all the media coverage that seems to be surrounding domestic violence and battered women, I think this event is very timely," Jones said. A forum on alcohol and date rape will present information that is especially relevant to the campus community, Jones said. A second forum will emphasize the problem of sexual harassment.

The week will conclude with a healing ceremony for survivors of sexual harassment and their supporters. "It will basically be a calming ceremony for people to come together and share their own experiences, as well as reflect on our goal," Jones said.

With all the events planned throughout the week, Jones said she hoped many people would come out and show their support in increasing awareness.

James Peacock, professor of anthropology and former chairman of the UNC Faculty Council, said the proposal allowed for a grievance procedure, but said it applied to policy grievances rather than individual decision grievances.

Peacock said the decision not to emphasize individual grievances in regard to the proposed merit-based salary determinations was based on concerns about the faculty reviewing faculty decisions in their own community.

Steve Leonard, associate professor of political science, said he did not understand why the proposed principles were so intent on preserving the administrative prerogative. "We need a mechanism that allows faculty council self-government to have some teeth in administrators' decisions," he said.

Pamela Conover, professor of political science, who authored the proposed principles, said the proposal required administrators to explain their actions.

Leonard said the proposal was merely a recommendation to the administration, and it still had no obligation to respect the proposed principles.

He suggested holding administrators accountable by tying their salaries with performance. "If we are held to merit, why can't they be held to merit?" he said.

The proposal will go before the Faculty Council at a meeting Friday.

not discuss. "Basically, the concerns that we have with the proposal are small loopholes that people can get out of what they say they are going to do," Johnson said after the meeting. "We have to trust that a person is going to follow the policy."

Re: November 7, 1995 School Board Elections

Dear Neighbors:

I am publishing this letter so that I might speak to the issues arising in the upcoming election. I feel strongly enough about these issues and this election that I am paying for this publication myself.

The coming years in Carrboro and Chapel Hill will require each of us to face issues which will effect our quality of life and the economic health of our community. We have an ever expanding number of students to educate while at the same time, we have recently spent record amounts on new facilities. There is today (and indeed has been for many years) an urgent need for fiscal responsibility in our schools. Unfortunately, we are now faced with almost crisis level conditions. We have overcrowded classes. We have violence in those classrooms. We have a widening gap between the test results of different ethnicities. We have a tremendous need for new energy, new ideas and creativity on the part of our School Board and School Administration.

The response to these issues by every other candidate to the School Board is to raise bonds, increase taxes and spend more money. While this tax and spend "solution" may sound politically correct, I feel strongly that it short changes our children and our community. We can utilize existing assets of this School District to greater advantage. We can curb violence through a firm and consistent response. We can raise educational standards by setting goals and enforcing them. We can use energy and diligence instead of expensive consultants. We must have a School Board which hears community needs and responds.

I am the only candidate to establish an 800 number to enable contact and response. I will continue this at my own expense, and respond to each call within 24 hours.

We need a School Board which leads in fiscal responsibility and encourages community participation. Let me begin this process by offering to donate, to the schools, all proceeds from my service on the School Board if elected. Let me continue this process by serving on the School Board. I appreciate your careful consideration of this letter and these issues. Should you have any concern or question, please feel free to call me.

Sincerely,
Rebecca S. Coyne

Symposium Commemorates Birth of President, Alumnus

BY JOE MILLER
STAFF WRITER

UNC celebrates today the 200th anniversary of the birth of a UNC alumnus and former president of the United States.

A symposium honoring James K. Polk will begin at 8 a.m. in the Wilson Library Assembly Room. The event is free and open to the public.

Robert Anthony, curator of the North Carolina Collection, said he hoped the symposium would increase awareness of Polk's role in American history and of his time at UNC.

"I think a lot of people are unaware that he's a UNC graduate, and he's not one of the better known presidents although historians consider him one of the more effective," Anthony said.

Anthony is just one of the symposium participants scheduled to attend. Others include Wayne Cutler, editor of "The Correspondence of James Knox Polk;" James Sasser, history professor at Central Piedmont Community College; and Harry Watson, UNC history professor.

The event has been publicized statewide throughout the year. Organizers of the event asked UNC to host the symposium because of the connection Polk had with the University.

The symposium will include a number of special events and attractions.

A tour of North Campus, where Polk lived and studied, is planned for today. It will be led by John Sanders, campus historian and director emeritus of the Institute of Government.

An exhibit on Polk also will open today in the North Carolina Collection Gallery in Wilson Library. A portrait of Polk, painted during his time in office, will be displayed along with artifacts found under a Chapel Hill hotel where Polk once stayed.

The festivities will continue on Saturday in Pineville, where Polk was born in 1795. It will include period music, crafts and renditions of speeches given by Polk. A Christmas celebration is also planned for Dec. 10 at Polk's memorial site.

Polk graduated from the University in 1818 before becoming the nation's 12th president in 1845.
