CONNER

The spending limit for student body president candidates is $400. There is a five percent grace, so candidates can claim no more than $420 expense.

"(The clipping) is considered campaign material by definition of campaign material," Stuart said. "Therefore its value has to be evaluated according to the campaign materials definition."

Kevin Schwartz, general manager of The Daily Tar Heel, estimated the cost of printing 800 14-page color papers to be $105, Stuart said. She said she would call other printers to get estimates from them, and Conner would have to claim the least expensive estimate.

Conner said he planned to claim the clippings on his expense report, but with no monetary value. If he does so, and Stuart thinks they should have value, Conner can appeal to the Elections Board.

"I think it's ridiculous that I be charged for a 14-page paper," Conner said. "I shouldn't even be charged for a fourth of a page ... Free market value is absolutely zero. Everywhere I go, DTHs are free."

The law school was a target because historically, law students turn out in large numbers for the elections, Conner said.

"We knew they would just be recycled anyway," said Conner, who also made 67 copies of the platform at Kinko's. "It's not like anyone was going to read the extra copies."

OPEN MEETINGS

papers to join in the action, which will be filed in the Guilford County Superior Court, and will name Hooker, Sullivan and UNC-system president C.D. Spangler as lead defendants.

Hooker said he could not comment on the possibility of a lawsuit.

Hooker met with NCPA Attorney Hugh Stevens and representatives of The Daily Tar Heel, The Chapel Hill News and The (Durham) Herald-Sun in January to discuss the request to open the Chancellor's Committees on Athletics and Buildings and Grounds on a trial basis.

Hooker said University Legal Counsel Susan Ehringhaus advised him that the Chancellor's advisory committees were not subject to the provisions in the law, but were instead meetings of professional staff.

Stevens debated this point with Hooker in the meeting, saying that students held positions on several of the committees. But Hooker said students were a part of the professional climate at UNC. "The participation of students in the committee structure of the University is an integral part of the operation and the character of this institution," Hooker stated in his letter.

Martin said she did not understand how information discussed in the committees could be of such a delicate nature that public debate could affect the matters at hand. "If Congress can meet in open session, then surely the University can."

Clinton, Holbrooke Named Nobel Peace Candidates

OSLO, Norway — President Clinton and his peace emissary for Bosnia, Richard Holbrooke, are among 103 people and organizations so far nominated for the 1996 Nobel Peace Prize.

Imprisoned Chinese dissident and human rights activist Wei Jingsheng has received multiple nominations. In keeping with the prize committee's tradition of secrecy, the non-voting secretary, Geir Lundestad, refused comment Monday.

He would say that 82 individuals and 21 organizations had been nominated as of Monday, but proposals postmarked by the Jan. 31 nomination deadline were continuing to arrive in Oslo and still could be included. The Oslo-based Norwegian Nobel Committee never discloses the names of candidates, partly to protect those struggling against oppressive regimes.

Jury Hears Ballistics

Testimony in Jordan Trial

LUMBERTON — Michael Jordan's father could have been killed with one of a million or more pistols, the agent who examined the bullet from the dead man's body testified Monday.

Ron Marrs, a gun expert for the State Bureau of Investigation, was on the witness stand the second day in the trial of Daniel Andre Green, who is charged with the July 23, 1993 slaying of James R. Jordan. District Attorney Johnson Britt has said the ballistics evidence is helpful even if it is not conclusive.

Testimony was delayed for 30 minutes in the morning because Green got into a fight with another inmate in a holding cell.

Green hit another inmate and cut the inmate above the eye, said Maj. Mark Locklear of the Robeson County Sheriff's Department. Green's clothes were bloodied and he wanted to change before entering the courtroom, Locklear said.

Helms and Faircloth Open E-Mail Accounts in D.C.

HIGH POINT — North Carolina's two U.S. senators now can be reached via computer. Both Sens. Jesse Helms and Lauch Faircloth recently added e-mail as one way constituents can communicate with them. Of the 14-member N. C. House delegation, 10 have e-mail addresses.

Peter Hans, communication director for Faircloth, said the senator's office receives 200 to 300 e-mail messages a week. Messages from North Carolina receive written reply, but e-mail from outside the state goes unanswered, Hans said.

Broughton said Helms' office is responding to e-mail messages electronically to acknowledge the transmission. If the sender includes a mailing address, a written response follows.
