The Tar Heels (9-3) held a 5-4 lead after going on a three-goal surge in the first half. But early in the second, Georgetown's (6-2) Stacy Duca posted back-to-back goals, giving the Hoyas an 8-6 lead they would never relinquish. UNC's Carla Nappi scored with 10:19 left, but UNC got no closer.

The Hoyas' defense completely shut down UNC freshman Erin McGinnis, the club's leading scorer, holding her without a point.

Katie Loois led the Tar Heel attack with a pair of goals, while Duca paced Georgetown with four goals and an assist. The Hoyas outshot UNC 25-20.

Tar Heels Use 'Lost Art' to Top Mountaineers

Bunting has become somewhat of a lost art in baseball today, but apparently North Carolina coach Mike Roberts doesn't agree.

The Tar Heels bunted for four base hits to help propel them to an 8-6 victory over Appalachian State on Wednesday night at Boshamer Stadium in front of a crowd of 143.

Down 6-4 in the bottom of the sixth inning, UNC (21-17) closed the gap to one, courtesy of an RBI bunt single by shortstop Brian Whitlock. It was Whitlock's second bunt base hit of the game.

In the eighth inning, with ASU (22-14) still leading 6-5, rightfielder Julian Dean led off with a bunt that hugged the first base line. Catcher Josh Rowell followed with a single, advancing Dean to third. Rowell stole second, and then Dean scored the tying run on pinch hitter Chris LaMarsh's sacrifice fly to right field.

But the Tar Heels weren't content with just a tie. With two out and Rowell on second, centerfielder Jarrett Shearin stepped up to the plate.

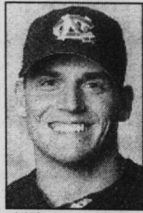

"With a runner in scoring position I was just trying to hit the ball hard," Shearin said.

Shearin did just that, smashing Phil Falco's offering over the left field fence for a two-run homer, making it 8-6 UNC. That was all the Tar Heels needed, as sophomore hurler Corey Richardson set the Mountaineers down 1-2-3 in the ninth inning.

Richardson entered the game in the eighth with the Tar Heels down 6-5, but became the winning pitcher when North Carolina scored three runs in the final frame.

"I just wanted to keep (UNC) in it, and do my best and just try to shut them down," Richardson said. "Whatever happened, happened ...

UNC pitcher COREY RICHARDSON got his fourth win of the year Wednesday night.

hopefully we'd win the game, and that's what happened thanks to (Shearin's homer)."

Despite the late-inning flurry, UNC started slowly and seemed primed for a fourth consecutive defeat.

An example of North Carolina's early sluggishness occurred with two outs in the top of the second. ASU's Scott Musgrave was caught in a run down when he unwittingly tried to advance to an occupied third base.

But when Tar Heel first baseman Mike Stoner threw the ball away, Musgrave was able to retreat safely to second base. Stoner's error allowed Chris Rodriguez to score from third, giving the Mountaineers a 3-1 edge.

In the fifth, Brent Payton added to UNC's woes, smacking a three-run homer to make it 6-1 ASU. But despite the early mishaps, the Tar Heels managed to claw their way back behind the power of ... the bunt.

"The thing I liked about tonight's game was that we made some mistakes, but we really played baseball," Roberts said. "We had four bunt base hits, which to me is Carolina type baseball, and we haven't played that in a long time."

Men's Tennis Seeks Perfect Mark, No. 1 Seed in Match Against Duke

BY ALEC MORRISON
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

UNC's quest for perfection ends today. The 17th-ranked North Carolina men's tennis team faces No. 10 Duke at 2:30 today in the Tar Heels' final ACC match of the year. UNC (17-2, 7-0 in the ACC) arrives in Durham seeking an undefeated conference season, its first since 1992.

But Duke (14-4, 5-1) may have other plans. While the Tar Heels can secure the top seed in next week's ACC tournament with a victory, the Blue Devils could claim that spot for themselves with a win today.

"It's a great position (for UNC) to be in," Tar Heel coach Sam Paul said. "I still think Duke's the favorite, though. They've beaten teams that have beaten us ... but it's going to be a great match."

North Carolina rolled through its first seven conference matches, allowing no opponent to win more than one individual match each time. Top-seeded and 21st-ranked David Caldwell, No. 2 Brint Morrow and No. 4 Tripp Phillips all have 7-0 conference marks this year, and the other three UNC singles players hold 6-1 records.

Duke, meanwhile, has posted its own strong numbers. Senior Rob Chess, ranked 11th in the nation, is 6-0 in ACC play and will give Caldwell perhaps his stiffest challenge of the year at No. 1. Dmitry Muzyka owns a 4-1 record in the ACC at No. 2. Sven Koehler, who has split time at the second, third and fourth spots, rounds out a trio of Blue Devils ranked in the top 70.

Doubles play will also be crucial. Last season in Chapel Hill, the Tar Heels captured the doubles point to gain the momentum which eventually secured the match. Both teams will attempt to do the same today, and the battle may come down to the top spot among the tandems.

And if the two teams needed any more incentive, there's always the rivalry factor looming behind every shot the players hit. The Blue Devils have established themselves as perennial ACC frontrunners, and the Tar Heels would like nothing better than to claim that role for themselves.

"Definitely, when you play Duke in anything, there's added emotion," Paul said.

"We try to take every ACC match seriously. But with Duke being a cross-town rival ... the kids are going to get up for it."

Tar Heel freshman ERIN MCGINNIS was held scoreless vs. Georgetown.
