Activists speak against death penalty

BY SARA DEMANIGOLD

Growing numbers of murder victims' families oppose the death penalty across the country. Since 1979 more than 340 people have been executed in the United States, and that number is continuing to

Murder Victims Families for Recon-Murder Victims Families for Recon-ciliation tries to spread the message that killing is wrong, but it can't be justified by another killing. "In society, we use the death penalty as a quick way out," said Pat Clark, National Criminal Justice Rep-resentative from the American Friends Service Committee

The group proposes that instead of the death penalty, inmates should serve lengthy sentences without the option of parole and should be required to make restitution to the victims' families.

The group told stories of how crime had affected them at a forum Monday at the Olin T. Binkley Baptist Church.

Founded 20 years ago by Marie Deans of Richmond, Va., after the death of a family member, Murder Victims Families for Barrer 11 lies for Reconciliation provides a forum for murder victims' families who reject the death penalty.

The group believes that killing should not be answered by another act of vio-lence, but supports alternative solutions.

Currently, the group has an international mailing list of 4,000 supporters.

Members said they chose not to pass the pain of losing a loved one on to others. George White survived a brutal attack in which his wife was murdered. He was exonerated after serving two years in cricios for his wife? in prison for his wife's murder. White said he now views the death penalty in a

Although White was an innocent man incorrectly accused of a crime, he said he believed the death penalty was not the answer. "Hate is a continuation and not an end," White said.

The organization challenges citizens to consider other available options to the death penalty. White said capital punishment was not a solution to violence or crime, but it took the focus off of the issue

More than 3,000 prisoners are on death row in 38 states and 2 federal jurisdic-tions. Sam Reese Sheppard said, "The death penalty business is manufacturing dysfunctional people."

At the age of 7, Sheppard lost his mother. Soon after, his father was sent to prison after being convicted of the second-degree murder of his wife. The eel-parted case was made into the popular ebrated case was made into the popular television show and movie, "The Fugi-tive." Although Sheppard's father was wrongly accused, he spent over 10 years in jail for a crime he did not commit.

"Public officials were under pressure to get the offender and mistakes are made with little recourse.'
