GOP Pans Lottery in Radio Ad

The N.C. Republican Party began an ad campaign this week criticizing the proposed statewide lottery and Lt. Gov. Dennis Wicker's support of it.

Republicans are not supporting the push for a lottery because it would crete a larger state government, said Mark Fleming, communications director for the N.C. Republican Party.

In addition, opponents say they are against a suggestion to put the lottery issue to a public referendum, which they describe as unconstitutional.

"We're opposed to taking money out of the private sector and putting it into the public sector," Fleming said.

The 60-second radio ad targets Wicker because he once opposed the lottery, and he now supports it.

"In 1992, (Wicker) was a strong lottery opponent," Fleming said. "Six years later, he has changed his position because his pollster told him it was an thing for political expediency."

But Bob Phillips, press secretary for Wicker, said Wicker changed his mind for two reasons.

"He has recognized people really want to have a say and vote on (the lot-tery issue)," Phillips said. "But most importantly, it would be the opportunity to help education."

But opponents of the lottery have said the money generated would not go toward education improvements.

Don Carrington, vice president of the John Locke Foundation, a conservative think tank in Raleigh, said states without lotteries allocated 36 percent of their budget for education compared to the 32 percent in states with lotteries.

Fleming also said a statewide lottery would not benefit education.

"We don't think we should be gambling with our children's education," he

But Phillips said Wicker wanted lottery proceeds to go to specific educa-tional programs that were new, such as Georgia's HOPE scholarship program that grants money to students who meet a grade point average requirement.

In that way, dollars targeted for public education would not be taken away and given to other government programs as lottery monies increased, a phenomenon that is occurring in other states with lotteries, Phillips said.

The ad, which is running in metro politan areas across the state, tells listeners that lottery money won't go to education and encourages them to inform Wicker of their opinions.

Carrington said the ad's focus on Wicker was an appropriate tactic.

"I think it's important the lieutenant governor has flip-flopped on the issue," he said. "I don't really know what he
