the glass, taking a 52-36 rebounding edge. The Devils also racked up 22 offensive rebounds against a UNC team that outrebounded them 42-32 in the first meeting. Center Elton Brand led Duke with 13 boards while reserve forward Corey Maggette added 11.

Ward Corey Maggene anden 11. UNC entered play leading the nation in rebounding margin at 10.4 per game. With Duke patrolling the glass, UNC was limited to one look at the basket. That control of the trenches allowed Duke to overcome a 41.4-percent shooting night. It also sparked Duke to a deci-Stre 22-6 run during a 6:48 span that turned a five-point edge into a 68-47 edge with less than five minutes to play. The run was keyed by guard Trajan Langdon, who despite shooting only 4 for 14 on the night, came off screens to hit a jumper from the right wing and a 3-pointer from the same spot off set plays out of a Duke timeout. "I said to the guys, 'We're up five and we're not hitting our shots,'" Langdon said. "We felt that if we played defense and rebounded, the shots were going to start falling and we'd go on a run. Once Langdon struck, Brand and uard William Avery (game-high 24 points) followed with two scores apiece. "It seems like Langdon got the team A seems need the angloon got the team started because all of them just excelled from then," said UNC forward Ademola Okulaja (10 points). "It was hive, 'Oh, thank you. Trajan's back." Meanwhile, UNC's offense couldn't attack with its first-half efficiency. With the with the first-half efficiency. With the quintet of Okulaja, guards Jason Capel, Ed Cota and Max Owens, and forward Kris Lang combining to shoot 10 for 35, UNC relied on center Brendan Haywood. Haywood hit 7 of 9 shots for a team-high 16 points. "UNC shot 2 for 12 from behind the point arc in the second half. Duke pulled down nearly every miss and tor-tugusly pulled away from UNC. "You can't get down by so many points to a team like Duke and expect to come back," Capel said. "Their offense is high-powered." The Tar Heels finished the game by shooting 9 for 29 in the second half and 37.7 percent overall. Duke shot 42.9 ent in the second half but hit 8 of 11 shots in the decisive run.

"We told the kids coming into the game, 'Don't concentrate on Battier being out or 16-0. Concentrate on blocking out. Concentrate on execution, the things you have control over," Dake coach Mike Krzyzewski said. The team did that the whole second half. That's the sign of a mature team. half. I hat's the sign of a mature team. So too was forgetting last year's contest at the Smith Center. In that game, inspired by a raucous crowd, No. 2 UNC throttled No. 1 Duke 97-73. On Saturday, the Tar Heels got similar support from a rowdy crowd that figured UNC had another chance to ruin. ke's designs on a perfect ACC mark. Instead the fans were somberly filing to the exits with two minutes to play. "We wanted to win on their home home floor," Carrawell said. "Not only to go 16-0 - you can't say you're not thinking about that in the back of your mind - but to win on their home floor was the big thing. The best thing about walking out settled matters when he fired a shot

across the goal to beat Butler keeper Brel McCoy.

After an extra-20 goal from man Sonke gave UNC a 7-1 lead early in the second quarter, it looked as if there would be no repeat of last UNC attackman year's drama. Jeff Sonke tallied three goals against Butler, including But apparently the Bulldogs (0-2) didn't want to be run off the stage the game-winner. so easily.

Behind three third-quarter goals from midfielder Cory Kahoun and two from attackman Chris Vosburgh, Butler knot-ted the score at eight with 12:55 remaining in the period. The Bulldogs' comeback effort was aided by the fact that UNC's offense hit the snooze button in the third, going nearly 12 minutes without a goal

We just weren't finishing our shots," Carey said.

Meanwhile, the Butler attack was finding the back of the cage against UNC freshman goalie Kris Blindenbacher, who spelled senior Jarron Harkness for the second half. After the Tar Heels streaky offense After the lar Heels streaky onense rebuilt a three-goal lead at the end of the third, the Bulldogs again equalized things when Kahoun pump-faked to lose a defender and fired the ball into the lower left corner of the cage, deadlocking the game at 11. The goal was one of five Kahoun scored on the evening. "Kahoun stuck shots that are going to go in against any goalie in the country," UNC coach Dave Klarmann said. "He shot the ball the way we'd all like to shoot the ball - in the corners. But thanks to Sonke's goal, UNC stayed unbeaten in its young season. The Tar Heels won their opener at Navy Field on Friday night, thumping Colgate 17-8 behind five goals from junior attackman Matt Crofton.

By ERIN HILS Staff Writer Riding high off a record-breaking meet last weekend, the North Carolin gymnastics team remained undefeated at home this season by easily defeating both William & Mary and R a d f o r d Gymnastics Friday night at Carmichael

W&M .....184.950 UNC .....191.125 Auditorium. Radford ....182.600 Having defeated

William & Mary in Virginia earlier this year, and handing Radford a loss in Chapel Hill in January, UNC was already familiar with its opponents. This knowledge worked mightily to its advantage as UNC (191.125) outdis-tanced William & Mary (184.950) and Badford (182.600) Radford (182.600).

For the seventh time in as many tries, sophomore Brooke Wilson captured the all-around title for UNC with a score of 38.225 and first-place finishes on the uneven bars and floor exercise.

Freshman Monica Middleton took first place on vault with a score of 9.650 and fellow frosh Lisa Companioni took home run of his career to left field. Friday's game started off much like the other blowouts as the Tar Heels finished the first inning with six runs. In the second inning, however, UNC lost focus and allowed three Temple runs off two Tar Heel errors.

"We had that little emotional letdown and I was really disappointed," Fox said. "This league is so good that we bet-ter continue to step up and improve." In the end, the Tar Heels wrapped up with an 11-4 win off of Mike Bynum's first on the beam with a mark of 9.525. North Carolina coach Derek Galvir said he was pleased with the quality of his gymnasts' performances in those two events, but was less than ecstatic with the low scores handed out by the judges.

"The judging was accurate in the sense that it ranked the athletes correctly," he said. "It wasn't inconsistent from one team to another - it was just particularly harsh."

Since two judges score each event, the scores are often not identical, but are usually accurate within one-tenth of a point of one another.

But on the beam and vault, UNC received, on several occasions, scores that were separated anywhere from .15 to .30 points - an inconsistency in judging rarely seen.

Despite this, Galvin said he felt UNC performed well overall and praised the efforts of the visiting opponents. "William & Mary and Radford both are three to four points stronger than. those (overall) scores reflect," Galvin said. "The particularly harsh judging on the part hear bare will three to rem?" vault and beam hurt all three teams

Sunday at Cone-Kenfield Tennis Center and fell to 3-2 on the season. Going into doubles, both teams had to win two of three matches for victory. "We've played a couple of these, so it's getting to be commonplace for us to be thrilling," Tennessee coach Mike Patrick said.

UNC's No. 2 doubles, Caroline Hill and Courtney Zalinski, fell quickly to Candy Reid and Alison Ojeda 8-1.
