

10 Horace Williams Airplanes Looted

Staff Report

Ten different planes located at Horace Williams Airport were reported broken into Saturday, according to police reports.

Unknown subject(s) stole property from nine planes and damaged one plane between 5 p.m. Friday and 10 a.m. Saturday.

Five individuals, one corporation and the Chapel Hill Flying Club filed reports with University Police.

Nine incident reports cite breaking and entering motor conveyance and felonious larceny while one report cited attempted larceny.

Bill Sawyer, president of the Chapel

Hill Flying Club, said he hoped that University Police would pursue the case. Five of the airplanes that were broken into belonged to club members.

"We've been told that the initial (investigation) report will be available tomorrow morning," Sawyer said. "The total losses are substantial."

Sawyer said he learned Monday that airplanes at the Franklin County airport were broken into the same night.

"This is the first time anything has ever happened at Horace Williams Airport," he said.

Sawyer said that although several planes were locked, the airport itself remains unlocked. He said security at Horace Williams Airport was minimal.

"The standard across the country is that you don't lock airports," he said.

Crime is uncommon at airports because aviators treat each other with respect, Sawyer said.

The suspect(s) only stole certain equipment and left some more expensive equipment behind, he said. "It appears (the suspects) had a specific list of items they were looking for."

The incident occurred days after the National Transportation Safety Board released a factual report with new information about a June 5 plane crash at the airport. The report revealed that the pilot of the Cessna 152 airplane, Roderick Farb, tested positive for drugs shortly after the accident.

Reports state that a $1,000 audio panel, GPS-Com navigation equipment valued at $10,000 and communication radio and a $3,000 Garmin 430 communication radio was stolen from a 1976 Cessna 210 airplane.

Two pieces of radio/communications navigation equipment valued at $3,500 were removed from the cockpit area of a 1992 Mooney M20J airplane.

A $4,500 King KX155 communications radio was stolen from a 1970 Piper Arrow airplane.

A $2,500 King KX155 communications radio and a $500 headset were stolen from a 1973 Piper PA-28-235 airplane.

Navigation and radio equipment valued at $3,000 and a King KR86 ADF valued at $2,500 was stolen from a Piper PA-28-161.

Two pieces of dual communication and radio equipment valued at $3,000 each were stolen from a 1980 Mooney M20J.

A $1,500 Cessna 300 navigation radio was stolen from a 1978 Cessna 152.

Two pieces of King KX155 navigation/radio equipment valued at $6,000 each, a $1,000 King KT78A transponder and a $900 audio panel were stolen from a 1982 Piper PA-28-161 airplane.

A King KMA24 audio panel valued at $900 and two pieces of King KX155 navigation/radio equipment valued at $3,000 each were stolen from a 1979 Piper PA-28-161.

One victim reported attempted larceny of a 1975 Cessna 172M which sustained $4,000 worth of damage.

State Braces for Wintry Blast

Associated Press

After laying low for a month, winter struggled to life Monday and prepared to give North Carolina a dose of snow, sleet and freezing rain.

While severe weather wasn't expected, cold air from the north and moisture from the southwest were expected to supply the ingredients for a wintry day Tuesday, the National Weather Service said Monday.

Winter weather advisories were posted from the Blue Ridge Mountains to the Atlantic shore. Travel problems may develop as a result of the storm, the advisories said.

Light snow was forecast to begin after midnight Monday in the northwest mountains, with accumulations reaching 2 to 3 inches by midday Tuesday, the weather service said.

As the weather system pushes east out of the mountains, sleet and freezing rain will mingle with the snowfall. Snowfall amounts were expected to total an inch or less east of the mountains, forecasters said.

The weather service said the system should clear the state by Tuesday night.
