For the Record

The Wednesday story "New Details Surface in Murder Case," incorrectly listed items found in Michael Jordan Cruz's car. Those items were listed in a search warrant submitted to courts by Chapel Hill police, but were not actually found in the automobile.
 The Daily Tar Heel regrets the error.

 Kleinschmidt could not be reached for comment Thursday.
 Elections Board Chairwoman Catherine Yates said the legislation had officially been placed on the ballot following the December vote.
 But she said she learned Thursday that the legislation had been passed in violation of the Student Code and then removed it from the ballot.
 Yates said that if the legislation passed on Tuesday by the necessary vote, that she would again place it on the ballot.
 Sources told the DTH that if Kleinschmidt decided to defend the resolution's passage, it could launch a Student Supreme Court lawsuit.

have involved postponing the hearing," Haywood said. "The goal is to ensure as fair a trial as possible."
 Defense Counsel Aaron Bednar said he had not expected further charges. "I was entirely surprised at this," he said.
 Haywood said open hearings were very rare. D'Amore's is only the second in four years, although a drug-related hearing last November was closed by the defendant at the last minute.
 She originally came before the Honor Court on a charge of falsely saying she was registered with University Career Services. She allegedly committed this offense in order to obtain an interview with Kraft Foods, which was recruiting on campus.
 At the time of the interview, she allegedly arrived with several other students, who proceeded to protest against Kraft's affiliation with Philip Morris.

 D'Amore testified she did not intentionally mislead anyone. She said she had not lied and was unaware that being registered with Career Services was a requirement to obtain an interview.
 She said she intended to ask the interviewers about contacting Kraft employees who could give the protesters accurate information about the company. She planned to be accompanied by Lyndy Worsham, field organizer for INFACT, the national organization responsible for the Kraft protest.
 "Nowhere in my mind did I find it to be misleading (not to mention Worsham to Career Services)," D'Amore testified.
 D'Amore testified that Worsham informed her of the protest activity only after she had made the appointment, which was during a time slot when another interview had been canceled.

 D'Amore said she told Worsham that she was uncomfortable with bringing the protest to the recruiters, went to the meeting to inform them that she would not be interviewing and then left without being involved in that protest.
 Honor Court Chairwoman Ellen Chance said the Court probably saw the possibility that D'Amore was misusing University Career Services as grounds for new charges.
 "I feel like (D'Amore's) rights have been violated," said Worsham, who flew in from Florida to give evidence. "They interrupted before I (and other defense witnesses) could make a statement."
 Haywood said he realized the system was imperfect. "(But) our system protects students' rights."

Management at 108 E. Main St., said he smelled smoke from his office building.
 Chan said she was concerned about being able to open the restaurant before the Chinese New Year, which takes place Feb. 4.

 "I feel so sad because the new year is coming," she said. "Every year I've been owner we've always had a celebration for the new year. But I don't know about this year. It's just so terrible."

One aspect of the proposal Ort cited as particularly beneficial would be an increase in funds for the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant.
 SEOG provides money to individual campuses on the basis of the financial need of each campus. Ort said UNC was in the process of applying for its annual SEOG funding.

 She said $12,000 of the funding this year would go to aid the small number of UNC students whose families had suffered the financial damage of Hurricane Floyd and its aftermath.

The president also called for a $1 billion increase in Pell Grants, new College Completion Challenge Grants and other federal education assistance, including work study and a new plan for helping students pursuing dual degrees.
 The proposal includes $35 million for the College Completion Challenge Grants, designed to spur college dropouts to return to class; $40 million for a new initiative to help minorities pursue five-year dual-degree programs in fields where they are underrepresented; and $716 million for the Pell Grants.
 Clinton's plan seeks $100 million in increases for the Gear Up program, which helps disadvantaged youths stay in high school; TRIO, which helps them stay in college; Job Corps, a national job training program targeted at impoverished youths; and similar initiatives.

 Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., stood by the president as he chided Republican leaders who all but killed his education agenda last session.
 Making college tuition tax-deductible was a key campaign pledge of Schumer in his successful bid to oust Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato in 1998.
 "Nothing ... should get in the way of making a college education more affordable for all Americans," Clinton said.
