won numerous awards. She has also lectured on her work at institutions such as Oxford University and the Smithsonian and has had her works translated into multiple languages. But when it comes to naming her favorite literary endeavor, McCrumb is down-to-earth. "As with most writers, my favorite book is the book I will write next," she said. After I finish the one I'm working on, I always hate that one."

McCrumb returns to UNC this Sunday as part of the Second Sunday Reading Series. She will read from her works at 2:30 p.m. in the Pleasants Family Room in Wilson Library.

Candidate Boasts Experience

Thad Woody, the sole GPSF candidate running for the presidency, says he does not take his campaign lightly.

By ARMAN ANVARI
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: The DTH will run candidates' profiles on the same day as the editorial board prints their platforms.

Write-in Graduate and Professional Student Federation presidential candidate Thad Woody of Waynesville said he would be able to devote the time to properly serve the needs of graduate and professional students. "I understand the mammoth time commitment involved with the position and don't consider it lightly," Woody said.

"Although I will be out of town during some period of the summer, working, I have made a priority to stay in town during the month of May when the state legislature seems to be busiest."

Woody attended UNC as an undergraduate, served two terms in Student Congress and was 1996 senior class president. He said his experiences would help him as GPSF president. "While serving in those positions, I had the opportunity to network with the University community and state legislature."

He said his greatest successes as president involved volunteer work. "The enterprise I feel most proud about as senior class president was the implementation of a volunteer corps that enrolled nearly 300 seniors and worked on service projects around the state," he said.

Although Woody is the only candidate for the position, he said he did not take the race lightly. "Being involved in campus politics as long as I have, you quickly learn that nothing is a sure thing."

Phone Calls Make McCain Complain

Associated Press

FORT LAWN, S.C. — John McCain on Thursday demanded that George W. Bush's campaign stop making misleading phone calls to voters about him after a woman told the senator her 14-year-old son was brought to the brink of tears by a pollster.

The Texas governor denied his presidential campaign was behind such calls, and promised, "If anyone in my campaign has done that, they're going to be fired."

On the day that Steve Forbes officially dropped out of the Republican race, Bush also offered fresh criticism of chief opponent McCain for transferring $2 million from his Senate campaign account to his presidential fund — a practice Bush said he would work to end if president.

Bush's political team, meanwhile, continued its work to calm jittery Republican leaders. In a conference call

Thursday with GOP supporters, campaign manager Joe Allbaugh said this week was intended to "staunch the hemorrhaging" caused by McCain's New Hampshire win, and he said campaign polls showed that Bush's more aggressive campaign against the Arizonan "was having an effect."

The conference call was private, but two officials who participated confirmed the events on the condition of anonymity.

Looking ahead, Allbaugh said the campaign plans next week to describe McCain as a senator who never accomplished major legislative goals, one official said.

For the third day running, the two GOP contenders exchanged harsh words long-distance in the battleground state of South Carolina, which holds its primary Feb. 19. A new American Research Group poll showed a tight race — 46 percent support for Bush and 39 percent for McCain.

Jordan for Bradley Campaign

Michael Jordan says Bill Bradley's support of health care pushed him to endorse the Democratic candidate.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — His airmess Michael Jordan, the most marketable athlete to ever pitch a product, is trying to give Bill Bradley a lift in his first political endorsement ad.

Bradley, a former New York Knicks star, already has collected endorsements and cash from his basketball buddies. But the new Jordan ad may be the most prized dividend from his days on the court as he seeks the Democratic nomination for president.

Jordan, who retired from the Chicago Bulls as a superstar, takes in some $69 million each year selling sneakers, soft drinks, cologne and underwear. He stars in ads for long-distance phone companies, batteries and hot dogs. If Bradley had to pay market rate for his services, he couldn't afford them.

But Jordan and Bradley are friends, and that persuaded the sports icon to make the ad, said Kristen Ludecke, Bradley's spokeswoman.

The 30-second spot shows Jordan declaring his support for Bradley based on his commitment to health care for children, gun control and other issues. It will air in more than a dozen states, including many holding primaries on March 7, a critical date in Bradley's race against Vice President Al Gore.

The Gore campaign professed no fear. "We've got Shaquille O'Neal. He's bigger," said spokesman Chris Lehane, referring to the Los Angeles Lakers center.

Jordan could not be reached Thursday for comment.
