Runner-Up Tar Heels Could Make Title Run Next Year

By IAN GORDON Staff Write

As the Virginia men's swimming and diving team raucously sang the school's alma mater Saturday in celebration of its third ACC title, North Carolina's squad slowly filed into its locker room.

Some of the athletes trudged toward the depths of Koury Natatorium, ignoring what was happening before them. Others looked back and seemed to take

"Watching them receive the trophy, it hurts, but I think that this year, we swam incredibly well," sophomore Kevin

Indeed, the Tar Heels put on their best performance of the season, but it was not enough to defeat the Cavaliers.

Next year might be a different story. UNC will graduate its senior diving duo of Kevin Mangum and Christian Zuburg, as well as swimmer David Weeks. The rest of the 35-man roster will return.

Things work in cycles," Erndl said. "In the past, we've definitely shown what we're capable of, and I think the cycle will continue. We'll find ourselves where sooner than we think."

the top of the ACC.

But this year, spectators at the men's and women's meets will remember Perry more for his singing than for his stroking. Perry sang the national anthem on a nightly basis after teammates found out

"I wasn't really chosen, I guess," rry said. "I kind of volunteered myself – I thought it would be nice to have somebody on our team sing."

Thou Shalt Not Use Flutter Kick

Despite the plethora of career- and ACC-best times that were put in over the course of the men's conference championships, the most highly anticipated swim was one that didn't even count.

Virginia's Ed Moses, the nation's top-ranked swimmer in the country in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke events, was disqualified in Saturday morning's 200 breaststroke qualifier

According to meet officials, Moses used flutter kick after his turns at each wall, which is illegal in the breaststroke.

In the night session, UNC's Sean Quinn won the 200 breaststroke final with a time of 1:57.90.

Then came Moses's second attempt.
UVa.'s star decided to swim the event by himself after the meet, and everyone in the Natatorium stayed around to watch. Moses didn't disappoint. He clocked in with an unofficial time of 1:53.99, ich would have broken his own ACC record had it counted. Said UNC coach Frank Comfort of Moses, "He's as good as any male athlete you'll see while at North Carolina,
