

Gore's Funding Tops Bush's for 1st Time

WASHINGTON — His record-shattering treasury drained by a $2 million-a-week advertising binge, George W. Bush for the first time trails Democratic rival Al Gore in available cash to spend pursuing the White House over the next five months, records showed Monday.

The Texas governor's latest spending report shows he began March with just $75 million — a tenth of the $73.9 million war chest he amassed while vanquishing a tougher-than-expected challenge from John McCain for the Republican presidential nomination.

In contrast, Gore's spending slowed over the last two months, along with the threat from his now ousted challenger Bill Bradley, leaving the vice president with $10 million in the bank to begin the month, campaign aides said.

Bush already has begun to hit the fund-raising trail in pursuit of $10 million in fresh funds — a marked reversal that now forces him to catch up in a money chase he once dominated.

The Texas governor cited the "hard-fought primary" in releasing a report that detailed the sudden reversal of fortunes. His aides said he already has raised $225,000 this month since capturing the GOP nomination March 14.

"America is ready for a fresh start after eight years of partisanship, division and gridlock under Clinton-Gore," Bush said.

"America is ready for a president who will bring people together to reform education, save Social Security, strengthen our military and lower taxes."

Both men face challenges as they try to conserve money for national advertising and targeting of key electoral states over the next five months. Late this summer they'll each receive $67.6 million in federal funds for their fall campaigns.

Experts say Bush has raised so much money for primaries that he has tapped most of the traditional GOP donor base, while Gore is facing a $40.5 million spending limit he agreed to when he accepted federal funds for his primary campaign. Bush declined federal financing for the primaries, freeing him from the limits.

With some additional fund-raising, Gore expects to have about $14 million to spend through his party's nominating convention. If Bush reaches his goal, he'd have about $17 million to spend before the convention.

"It won't be as much as an advantage as Bush hoped for at the start of the process," said Anthony Corrado, a professor of government at Colby College in Maine who studies political financing.

The February spending report details where much of Bush's historic treasury went.

A computer analysis showed he spent $13.2 million last month — $7.6 million of it on advertising in nine states with early primaries such as California, New York, South Carolina and Michigan. He won three of the four, ultimately forcing McCain from the race.

Bush also spent $1.9 million on direct mail and postage, $236,000 on telemarketing and $72,500 on polling.

The spending brought his total at the start of March to $63.3 million. And he still had another $3.1 million in unpaid bills — including $874,921 for telemarketing and $1.1 million for direct mail — leaving him about $7.5 million in the bank.

Gore reported $4.1 million in unspent money at the end of February plus another $7 million in unspent federal funds owed his campaign.
