Improv Co. Relies on Audience

The actors will ask their audience to create the title and objective for tonight's musical performance.

By LINDSEY ZUCKERMAN
Staff Writer

Transactors Improv Company's performance of "The Musical!" promises to be more than typical song and dance.

The Carolina Union Activities Board teamed up with the improvisation group, which includes three UNC alumni and one instructor, to present a play where the audience rules.

The script for this musical will remain incomplete until tonight when viewers will have the chance to create their own plot. Six actors and two musicians will improvise the entire show from audience suggestions.

At the start of the show, the actors will ask for the audience to provide an objective and a title for the musical. From this suggestion, the accompanist and guest percussionist will begin playing an overture.

The actors never discuss what they will do when the music ends. Instead, they develop the characters and plots as the show goes. The improv group aims to discover what happens in the story rather than invent it, said Transactors' Executive and Artistic Director Greg Hohn.

"We're kind of doing our own thing really," Hohn said. "Musical improv is something we've developed in a vacuum."

The group specializes in long form improvisational theatre, a type of theatre where the actors develop an entire show from audience suggestions.

This version of improv is less well-known than short form improvisation where actors perform vignettes and theatre games.

Transactors Improv formed in 1983 at the Artschool in Carrboro. They have toured across the United States, concentrating mainly in the southeast with venues from the Spoleto Festival Theatre Fringe in Charleston, S.C., and the Artsplur in Raleigh.

Zach Hanner, Moe Chamble and Hone all graduated from UNC. Joining them in the cast will be three other performers with diverse backgrounds in dance, acting and music. A pianist and UNC instructor Matt Savage will provide the show's music.

The one-night show will go on at 7 p.m. at the Union Cabaret.

Teacher Admits to Shooting Herself

Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — A school teacher who reported being shot in her empty classroom confessed to authorities that she shot herself.

Teacher Kathy Morris had also sent herself threatening letters, Pima County sheriff's spokeswoman Deanna Coultas said Tuesday. Morris told authorities she did it to highlight the lack of security at the school.

"However, we're dealing with irrational thinking and irrational behavior," Coultas said.

She said authorities were looking into other motives and past incidents with the school but declined to elaborate, citing confidentiality issues. Morris has taught at the school since 1991.

Morris reported Monday that she had been shot in the shoulder in her classroom by a young Hispanic man after excusing herself from a staff meeting.

The shooting occurred about 90 minutes before students were scheduled to begin class.

Morris, 35, was in fair condition Tuesday at University Medical Center. Morris has declined all requests for interviews, according to hospital spokeswoman Vicki Gaubeca.

"Ms. Morris' allegation was destructive, damaging and insulting to our students and members of the district's minority community," district Superintendent Robert J. Smith said Tuesday.

Smith said Morris had been placed on paid administrative leave pending an investigation.

Coultas said investigators found a gun that had been fired once in a false bottom of Morris' purse.

Coultas said Morris was not immediately facing any criminal charges, but the Pima County attorney's office was seeking to have her sent to a mental health facility. A school custodian told investigators he heard a shot but there were no witnesses, Coultas said.

After the shooting, sheriff's deputies, including SWAT officers, searched the two-story school before expanding their search into the neighborhood.

After all other teachers and school personnel were accounted for, school officials canceled classes Monday. Students returned to class Tuesday.
