High Court Hears Pleas Against Partial Abortion Ban

WASHINGTON - Letting states ban a surgical procedure that opponents call partial birth abortion would affect only "a little-used form of abortion that borders on infanticide," the Supreme Court

"The state interest here is drawing a bright line between abortion and infanticide," Nebraska Attorney General Don Stenberg argued in seeking reinstatement of a law, similar to those in 30 other states, making it a crime for doctors to perform such abortions.

Simon Heller, the lawyer representing a Nebraska doctor, said the state law so broadly written it could prohibit most second-trimester abortions" and could lead to making all abortions

"more dangerous for women."

None of the state's purported interests

As the legal, moral and political war over abortion returned to the nation's highest court after an eight-year absence, the subdued argument session inside the stately courtroom sharply contrasted with dueling demonstrations outside the building.

Nothing during the court's hour-long argument session indicated a shift among the justices' views on abortion since 1992, when the court reaffirmed by a 5-4 vote that women have a constitutional right to end their pregnancies. Questions and comments from two key justices — Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony M. Kennedy — voiced concern about the sweep of the Nebraska law. Justices David H. Souter and John Paul Stevens also seemed to the two justices who joined the court after its 1992 ruling – Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Of the three remaining dissenters from the 1992 decision – Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, Scalia was by far the most animated

He repeatedly referred to "the horror" of the abortion procedure at issue, which he described as taking "a living, unborn child" from the uterus and "killing that unborn child."

The court's decision is expected by late June, but the issue already has played a role in presidential politics.

The Clinton administration is asking the court to strike down Nebraska's law. The president twice vetoed similar federal bans enacted by Congress.
