

68 Cited in Weekend ALE Bust; Officers' Presence Felt in Bars

BY COURTNEY MABEUS
Assistant City Editor

The three students draining two kegs at the feet of officers in the parking lot across from Key's Food Mart on Rosemary Street had no comment. But the look on the young men's faces and the sucking sound of two kegs going dry seemed to say enough. "We are going to let them take the kegs back tonight so they can get their deposits back," said Andrew Baker, an officer with the N.C. Alcohol Law Enforcement. But Baker refused to comment on whether the underage men were charged.

In a Sunday night operation, agents with Chapel Hill police and ALE began a campaign to crack down on underage alcohol violations by staking out local off-premise locations and area bars.

This weekend, agents cited 68 people on 85 charges, though more than 90 percent of the charges were written Sunday. The charges included 50 counts of possession of alcohol by an under-age person, aiding and abetting and the use of false IDs.

"It was a busy evening as expected," said Ken Pike, assistant ALE supervisor. "The operation went really well. The majority of places were in compliance. We observed a lot of positive things from the merchants."

Pike said Sunday night's focus was not only to catch underage drinkers in the act, but also to crack down on establishments "flagrantly selling" to minors.

The 20 officers involved with the operation began at 7 p.m. Sunday, checking local convenience and grocery stores. Between 11 p.m. and 2 a.m. officers patrolled local bars.

Officers said that Sunday, traditionally a big party night because it is the last before classes start, was quieter than in years past. Chapel Hill police Lt. Marsha Gale attributed the quiet to Fall Fest, the University's non-alcoholic celebration that runs until 2 a.m., the same time local bars close.

"It's kind of neat to come here and see something so positive happening," she said. "A presence, that's what you really want. You don't want to wait until anybody gets in trouble."

Still, the presence of officers in the midst of bargoers was felt by some students. Jeremy Smith, a senior economics major, said he saw no problems when agents entered He's Not Here and began checking IDs at random. "The officers were the only ones there not holding blue cups," he said. "They were just funny. They kind of stood out."

Gale said a successful night meant a quiet night, adding that educating minors, as well as local bartenders and shopkeepers, about the consequences of underage drinking is key.

"What we really enjoy is if nothing happens," she said. "It shows that they're doing something right. A lot of people think police want to make arrests and want to write tickets, but that's not true."

The collaborative effort between both the Chapel Hill Police Department and the ALE began nearly five months ago when ALE agents moved into a makeshift field office in the basement of the Old Franklin Street Post office. In April, Pike spearheaded an effort with the police dubbed "Operation Saturation," during which officials issued 51 citations for a variety of alcohol violations. Thirty-two of these led to arrests. "We feel like we're doing the right thing," Pike said. "We've been welcomed [by the community] with open arms."
