The UNC women's basketball team traveled to Australia and New Zealand during the summer to play three games.

By BRET STRELOW Assistant Sports Editor

North Carolina women's basketball coach Sylvia Hatchell won't hesitate to churn up memories of the team's summer trip to Australia and New Zealand when things get tough during the 2000-2001 season.

She might enter the huddle during a timeout and remind the Tar Heels how close they came to beating the New South Wales Institute of Sport.-Hatchell could even base a halftime speech on the teamwork her squad developed as it cascaded down the

"It was definitely rough, our runny it definitely tested some people's char-acter and exposed them to stuff they didn't ordinarily do, which is what a lot of this trip was about." The women's basketball team trav-elled to New Zealand on May 18 to play three exhibition games in a 13-day

The team, along with family members and boosters, spent three days in Auckland, New Zealand, five days in Sydney, Australia, and six days in Cairns, Australia.

The tour was organized and funded by Nike, which provides a foreign trip for its schools every few years. Eight players made the trip. Hatchell said each player had to maintain e 0.0 each player had to maintain a 2.0

grade point average to be eligible. Hatchell wanted her players to have an experience that went beyond bas-ketball. Senior Leah Sharp said the team had shootarounds only before its first and final games. "We didn't touch a ball until we went to the gym to play," Sharp said. Hatchell and a crew of 57 others stopped first in Auckland, where they ited a working sheep farm. Jennifer Thomas and Jackie Myers lked cows, and LaShonda Allen fed bottles to baby lambs. The team then went to Sydney and made stops Sophomore guard Coretta Brown had 19 points, five assists and five rebounds as UNC at the Olympic Village and the Sydney Opera House. Some players tried their won its last game. hand at throwing boomerang "One of them would throw it, and everybody would circle around," Hatchell said. "We'd all duck and hit the ground. When that thing was com-ing back, you wouldn't know where it was going." Chambers said players went off on their own in the city when they had free time. While in Sydney, she went shopping for a hat resembling the one Paul Hogan wore in "Crocodile Dundee

Her credit card wasn't working, so she had to run and find an ATM. By the time she was able to pay for her hat, the gates blocking the fairy the team was departing on had already been closed. "I stressed out for about 10 minutes, and then I grabbed a cab and asked if there was any more there and there was any way they could cross the harbor," Chambers said.

"There was, so I got a cab and actually ended up beating everybody The Tar Heels played the New South Wales Institute of Sport on May 22. The and it was a really good experience to play against Australian team featured 6-foot-5 such high-caliber players."

Lauren Jackson, whom Hatchell COURTNEY CHAMBERS called one of the North Carolina Guard best players in the the next day and lost 70-52. The Tar Heels wrapped up their exhibition slate with a 114-63 win against the Cairns Dolphins on May

30. Senior Juana Brown scored 23 points, and Coretta Brown chipped in 19 points, five assists and five Hatchell said point guard Coretta Brown excelled against the top-level competition. Chambers said the Australian teams

"They brought in their big guns, what it seemed like," Chambers said. "They brought in their big guns, and it was a really good experience to play against such high-caliber players." It was also a good chance to develop a new team identity.

Hatchell said question marks still surrounded the status of Nikki Teasley, who announced on July 27 that she would sit out the season because of a stress-related illness. Jackie Higgins, who didn't make the trip, recently announced she will pursue a profes-sional career overseas. Chambers said Coretta Brown is going to have to step up and score the points she was scoring. "It's going to have to come first from the seniors." Hatchell puts a lot of stock in sum-mer trips like the one her team just made for the first time. She's quick to point out all four Final Four teams from a year ago - Connecticut, Tennessee, Rutgers and Penn State -went on similar trips. Said Hatchell, "There's just some-thing about the summer tours that give

Chambers said Coretta Brown is coming into her own as a player and is looking to take on more of a leadership role this season. Sharp said Teasley's absence also forced her, Juana Brown and LaQuanda Barksdale – the three seniors who made the trip – into lead-orbin select ership roles.

"With Nikki, there's obviously a big gap to fill," Sharp said. "Somebody is going to have to step up and score the points she was scoring.

Men's Soccer to Battle Rowing to Hold Interest Meeting Sunday Hokies in Exhibition

From Staff Reports

The North Carolina men's soccer team will play its first and only exhibition game of the 2000 season Saturday afternoon.

The Tar Heels, tied for No. 24 in the preseason NSCAA national UNC poll, will host Virginia Tech at 2 p.m. at the WRAL Soccer Complex in Raleigh. UNC returns eight starters from the 1999 squad that went 12-7-1 and earned its first NCAA tournament bid in five seasons. Juniors Chris Carrieri, a third-team All-American, and Danny Jackson, second-team All-ACC pick in '99, will lead the offense and defense, respectively. The WRAL Soccer Complex is locat-ed on Perry Creek Road in Northeast Raleigh

UNC opens its regular season next weekend in Birmingham, Ala., at the UAB Nike Classic. The Tar Heels take on Illinois-Chicago on Sept. 1 at 7 p.m.

The boat in the Pit during the past few days has signaled a new beginning of sorts

As the North Carolina rowing team prepares to reload its novice squad for the upcoming season, its coaches and athletes are trying to introduce the sport to campus newcomers and newly inter-ested women alike.

To further that effort, the team will hold its annual interest meeting Sunday at 7 p.m. in Carroll 111. This open-try-out process used by UNC rowing is almost unheard of at this high-profile sports haven. But it works.

"There are a lot of programs around the country who still work this way, along with doing active recruiting," novice team coach Jason Coffman said.

"It's the mainstay of collegiate rowing. "The first week of classes, you just try to drum up as much support as you can because there's always going to be a few people out there who don't know that they could be rowers." Because of the sport's historic isolation at Northeastern schools, many col-leges elsewhere are just starting their programs. Rowing became a varsity sport at UNC just three years ago. There are also few high school or club rowing teams in the South, so many of the athletes whom Coffman will recruit have absolutely no experience. "Basically, we'll have 32 rowers that we have to teach how to be collegiate rowers," Coffman said. "That's a huge challenge. The good part about that is that we can offer some opportunities to people who didn't think that they had an opportunity to be a collegiate athlete before that."

Senior coxswain Robin Yamakawa vas once one of those former athletes. An athlete in high school, she never thought she would play a sport at UNC. But Coffman said Yamakawa is the typical UNC rower. "The people who tend to excel here in rowing are the ones who have had a good high school athletic background," he said Although

Coffman said he looks for height in his recruits, he has had all types in his

UNC coach Joel Furtek program. "Generally, the said he expects approximately 300 people to show up for the meeting. better rowers tend to be taller, about 5-10 to 6-2," Coffman said.

"But we have a few rowers - some of our best athletes – who are about 5-6, 5-7, who are just very powerful, very strong, very driven athletes."

Not only does each boat need strong rowers, but it also needs the keen eyes and ears of its coxswain.

When Yamakawa started as a coxswain, she had to get herself used to watching her teammates exert them-selves while she barked orders their way. "The first couple of weeks, I just she said. "But I realized that I could make them go fast in other ways." And the boats have gone fast. Despite the relative youth of rowing at UNC, the program has had its share of success. Head coach Joel Furtek said he expects about 300 prospective rowers to attend the team's information meeting Sunday. Junior rower Jessica Dunevant remembers well her novice season a year ago, including the initial apprehen-sion she felt toward the sport. But it is the camaraderie and excite-
