Online Calendar to Centralize Publicity

By PAIGE AMMONS

Beginning next semester, students will no longer have to search and scour the campus for upcoming activities.
Student Body President Brad Matthews, Vice Chancellor for Information Technology Marian Moore, Academic Technology & Networks representative Libby Evans and a committee of students are currently preparing a calendar of events on the Internet that all students will be able to access.

"For a long time, there has been a need for a central information point at Carolina," Matthews said. "For the last couple of years, it has been impossible to keep track of all the campus activities — this is an attempt to keep track of it all." Work on the project started last sum-mer, and the group is still in the process of perfecting the final product.

Matthews said the group has purchased Groveware, software that specializes in online calendars, and memcializes in online calendars, and members are now being trained on how to use it properly. ATN funded the purchase of the software.

Once the calendar is ready, student organizations will be able to submit activities to be listed online. "No matter who you are or what club you're in, you will be able to add your information to the Web-based campus calendar," Matthews said. Tyra Moore, president of the Black Student Movement, said the new online calendar will be useful the proup.

"If this it will greatly improve our communication, especially between student groups for better spacing and planning of events," Moore said.

Matthews is optimistic about the success of the calendar but warned that it wight take time for it to realize its full.

might take time for it to realize its full potential. "It will take awhile to become potential. It will take awhine to become effective because people have to get used to having it there, but it will be a tremendous benefit," he said. "Instead of having to search for what's going on on campus, you will be able to find it at a glance."

Warhol's Animal Show Opens at Art Museum

The late Andy Warhol's "Endangered Species" collection opened Sunday at the Ackland Art Museum, featuring 10 silk screens based on photos. All the images displayed are of endangered animals, ranging from tiggers to butterflies tigers to butterflies.

The Carolina Environmental Program and the museum will also cosponsor a related speech Nov. 8 by David Wilcove, senior ecologist with Environmental Defense in Washington who wrote "The Condor's Shadow: Loss and Recovery of Wildlife in America." The exhibit will be open until Jan. 21.

UNC Receives Grant From IBM for Research

UNC has received a research equipment grant from IBM Corp. to help support key Internet research projects.

The grant from IBM is valued at about $250,000 and will be used to support the University's recently launched ibiblio.org Web site. The equipment will support networking and Internet technologies research in the Department of Computer Science.

Computer Science.

The grant will also be used to help UNC expand its nanotechnology research program.

The IBM program is designed to establish or enhance a strong IBM technical presence at selected leading research universities and with top researchers in the university community
