Matthews said he felt the authors brought forth valid concerns in their letter. "I lived on South Campus for two years, so I am well aware of the difficulties that come with living in that area," he said.

Payne said he did not want to minimize any of the issues that were addressed in the letter but said residents need to be aware that South Campus is not the only area that has been affected by construction.

"It is important to realize that construction is not isolated to South Campus communities," he said. "Later on in the spring, there is going to be a North Campus steamline project and residents of those communities will be inconvenienced by that work."

Payne also said he has responded to both authors of the letter and that he is looking forward to scheduling a meeting with them. "I think it would also be a good opportunity to share things that we have already responded to and other things that we have plans for," he said.

But Baur said she wishes all the construction problems would end soon.

"This is where we are supposed to live and be happy and enjoy our Carolina experience," she said. "I haven't had that at all since the construction has been going on."

tors' concerns, Kinnaird said.

"The only thing this is doing is investigating whether the correct procedure was followed," she said. "We think it seems (the decision) went through kind of fast."

Insko said she thought the letter could help get the public more involved in the process. "This facility is only 20 miles from (UNC's) campus," she said. "There's a reason for people to be concerned."

While the NRC is not bound by the board's recommendation, both Insko and Kinnaird hope that the NRC will heed the findings of the investigators.

Neither members of the NRC nor investigators on the independent board could be reached for comment Sunday.

Keith Poston, spokesman for Progress Energy, the new owner of CP&L, said the plant has no plans to do anything differently in response to the letter or to the appeal filed this week by the commissioners asking the NRC for an evidentiary hearing. "We remain confident the NRC will confirm our plan is safe," he said.

Poston also said the second appeal would be Orange County's final one with the commission. From there, if the NRC confirms CP&L's findings as accurate, then Orange County officials will have to appeal to another level, he said.

Commissioner Barry Jacobs said the commissioners might take their concerns to the federal level if their appeal is dismissed by the NRC. "We're appealing the most recent ruling, and we've filed a motion with the U.S. Court of Appeals," he said. Jacobs said the filing was simply a notice of intent, and not a full-blown appeal yet.

Poston said the plant plans to move into its third pool this summer, barring intervention by the NRC or a higher authority. He added that the fourth pool probably won't open for another 10 years.

Jacobs said the commissioners will still seek an evidentiary hearing at the federal level. "If we get to that, we'll be trying to get what we tried to get two years ago."

on a 2-for-11 effort, and his brother Joe made only 7 of 21 on his way to 21 points.

But with 21 points from Ivory, 19 points from center Gyasi Cline-Heard and lots of help from the Tar Heels, it was enough.

Enough to send the Tar Heels, who once owned an 18-game winning streak and the nation's top ranking, home.

Enough to make them feel disappointed even with those accomplishments.

"I want to win the whole thing. It's hard for me to sit here and feel satisfied right now," Doherty said. "As you put distance between a loss, you do get to see a bigger picture. The only thing I can tell you is that I gave it my best effort."
