

Campus Calendar

Today

11 a.m. - Minefields in the Pit? Look out! As part of Human Rights Week, UNC's United Nations Organization along with Globe, a committee of the Campus Y, is creating a mock minefield in our very own Pit. Take some time to learn about the dangers of active mines and what action YOU can take to stop the violence against innocent people.
5 p.m. - Become an activist! Join the UNC chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at a meeting in Union

206. This week's topic is ways to increase your level of student activism.

Friday

1 p.m. - Robert Pollin, professor of economics at the University of Massachusetts, will speak on "Economics and the living wage: Are the two compatible?" in 211 Gardner Hall. All are welcome to attend.
6 p.m. - Masala presents its Spring Show in the Great Hall of the Student Union. The show will include performances by Sangam, Hip Hop Nation and Theta Nu Xi. Tickets, $3, are available in the Pit this week.

For the Record

The caption under the March 28 photograph with the story "Dressing Up and Getting Down" incorrectly identified the person featured in the photograph as Taj Mahal.
The person was actually Sonya Simone.
The Daily Tar Heel regrets the error.

demanding an end to violence against women.
The students yelled, "What do we want? No more violence. When do we want it? Now," and "We are women. We are strong. We've been victims way too long."
At a Franklin Street corner, the marchers blew whistles for 30 seconds to represent the fact that every 30 seconds a woman gets raped or sexually assaulted.
At the culmination of the walk, a Sharing Circle in the Pit gave victims the opportunity to talk about their experiences in an attempt to heal.

Participants in the march said they felt inspired.
"The Take Back the Night March increases awareness about sexual violence, and it empowers the people involved in the march," said sophomore Marnie Hanel. "It provides a valuable service to this campus."
ASAP Co-chairwoman Kathryn Kooistra agreed that the march was powerful.
"Night is associated with darkness and fear," she said. "Take Back the Night is an opportunity to bring the light."

VIGIL

Network for Change, also pushed the need for activism in his address. "Apathy does not get us anywhere," he said as he urged students to contact their local governments in support of anti-hate crime legislation. "Hate crimes affect not only the group of people targeted but the entire community."

Tina Singh, co-chairwoman of GLOBE, the Campus Y committee that co-sponsored the event, said the vigil fit nicely into the overall theme of Human Rights Week. "The first part of this week has been focusing on education and giving students resources about human rights," she said. "Tonight is when you can get up and be proactive. We've been sitting all week, and now it's time to do something about it."

Smaller and more intimate group discussions about the issues surrounding hate crimes were interspersed throughout the speakers' messages.
"Information about hate crimes should be released in a more prominent way so that it's not just read about in some history book," said junior Marrin Rothstein to her group members.

Junior Rudy Kleysteuber, student body vice president-select, said he felt the vigil was very effective. "It's a great way to push people out of their comfort zone and to force people to listen."
Freshman Alexis Gines said the ceremony was beautiful. "It gave people a chance to stand up for what they believe in," she said. "It makes people stand up for one another, and in return, you start to stand up for yourself."

FIRE

Branch said Hutchins now will also be repairing some fire damage.
But he said not everything burned will need to be repaired because some parts of the house are to be replaced.
"Some staircases were going to be ripped out anyway," Branch said.
Anhorn said Wednesday's fire proved that the town's ordinance is a necessary one.

"Unfortunately, I think that this has really reinforced the need for sprinklers," he said.
"That's not just for fraternities, that's for the whole campus. We need to have (a sprinkler system) installed because you never know what to expect."

PROJECT UNC

For those students who want to get involved, Young said registration is available online at www.unc.edu/student/orgs/punc, as well as in the Pit during the rest of the week.
Young said Project UNC falls into student government's renewed dedication to community service. "It's a push that hasn't been there in the past," he said. "It is a part of the University's mission, and we just want to extend that to the student body."

Young also said Project UNC allows students to reap the rewards of stepping out of their university boundaries.
"Volunteerism is just important for any group and helps bridge the gap between students and the town of Chapel Hill," Young said. "It's just a great opportunity, and everyone benefits from it."

CAA

The censure, which was proposed as the result of alleged misconduct within the organization, will not appear on any students' personal records but could prompt further investigations.
Pruitt said Congress' decision to act on accusations that have yet to be proven is unfair to the CAA. But he recognizes the issue is beyond his reach. "It's out of our hands now," he said. "It's in the hands of student government to make a decision and we'll go from there."
Matthews has yet to see the bill's final version. The addition of more than five amendments Tuesday night has slowed the process as Matthews nears his term's end. "I'm just kind of waiting to take a look and withhold judgement until I can take a look," he said. "I guarantee it will not be an easy decision to make."

Matthews has 10 days to consider the bill - but only five days left in his term.
He can sign the bill, veto it or, as the calendar now allows, do nothing before his time in office expires April 3.
But Speaker Alexandra Bell said she is confident the bill will resurface even if Matthews chooses to "pocket veto" it. "I have been told that the 83rd Congress will just reintroduce the bill," she said.

The University Editor can be reached at udesk@unc.edu.

If Matthews decides to use his veto power, Tuesday night's 17-1 vote almost guarantees the two-thirds vote needed to override a presidential veto. Bell said a special session of Congress can be called to vote on such a veto if needed.
But Matthews said Congress' response to a veto would have no bearing on his evaluation of the bill. "That won't affect my decision at all," he said. "This is the system of checks and balances and the ball will soon be in our court and that's our opportunity to take our position."
"All options are open at this point."
