in cleanup and food and clothing drives. CPS also helped gather monetary dona-tions to go toward the victims' recovery. Wolf Johnson said the center provides valuable assistance to the commu-nity. She stressed the importance of the new director's ability to work within the framework of CPS while bringing fresh ideas to the center.

"The staff has been working on a strategic plan, and we want the director to work with that plan," she said.

Other criteria are the amount of work experience applicants have in higher education and their ability to work with local town programs in addition to cam-pus groups, Wolf Johnson said. "The mission of the center is to serve those who serve," she said. "That's why we want the director to be able to work with faculty, staff and students."

Didow said he will continue to perform public service throughout his life and that he hopes the center will continue to build on the foundation he

for, but we actually have 4,440 children, and that number will grow in the next couple of weeks."

"We're already over capacity," "We're already over capacity," Scroggs added. "So if we build one (ele-mentary) school, that will give us 600 more seats, but by the time we open that school, that capacity will already be absorbed."

This year, officials employed several tools to determine the projected student growth. "For what the district uses, we're right on the money," Scroggs said. "If we were within a hundred students, I was going to be ecstatic, but we're even closer than that."

"This is the closest we have ever been on projection in years," he added. Scroggs said the final local count totaled 10,026 students systemwide, putting the local projection remarkably close to the predicted level.

"One of the big concerns was were we able to project accurately," he said. "We were off by 17 out of 10,000. And we're still growing."

The commissioners will hold a public hearing about the proposed bond package at 7 p.m. on Monday.

Candidates get the names of potential donors from a list of registered voters and past contributors.

The lists are supplied by the Orange County Board of Elections. Pavao said he would begin raising funds by sending out letters in the coming weeks.

"In a municipal campaign, if there are enough donors then you can run a reasonable campaign."
