

Tip Helps Catch UNC-G Prostitutes

By JENNIFER HAGIN
Assistant State & National Editor

UNC-Greensboro police arrested two students and charged them with prostitution Friday after receiving an anonymous Crime Stoppers tip.

Anthony Harvath, 20, was arrested in Ragsdale Hall on the UNC-G campus and charged with one misdemeanor count each of crime against nature, prostitution and procuring for prostitution, according to police reports. Harvath is a resident of Phillips Hall on the campus.

Christy Thigpen, 19, was arrested at Spencer Station on the UNC-G campus and charged with one misdemeanor count each of prostitution, maintaining a place of prostitution and procuring for prostitution, reports state.

The alleged acts occurred in Thigpen's room in Ragsdale, reports state.

UNC-G Police Lt. Paul Lester said Harvath and Thigpen made their prostitution arrangements on the Internet.

"They had encountered some people on AOL in a chat room and set up a meeting," he said.

Lester said police began an investigation about three weeks ago in response to the Crime Stoppers tip, which he thinks was made by an off-campus source.

He said the students have been removed from their residence halls and face campus disciplinary procedure.

They are scheduled to appear in court Nov. 21, reports state.

Lester said students living in Thigpen's residence hall were not aware of the alleged prostitution.

Lester also said he does not think this was a recurring action by Harvath and Thigpen or by UNC-G students in general.

"(The prostitution) is not only an isolated incident here at the university but for them as well."

For The Record

In the Oct. 29 elections page titled "Local Candidates to Face Off," Chapel Hill Town Council candidate Larry Daquioag's name was misspelled.

The Oct. 29 article "Endowed Posts Draw Professors" incorrectly stated that there are 700 faculty members at UNC. There are 700 faculty members in the College of Arts and Sciences.

The Oct. 30 article "Explanations Abound for High Crime Rates in the South" incorrectly stated that if the murder rate holds, it would mean a 700 percent drop. The drop would be 87.5 percent.

The Oct. 30 graphic "Not a Lot of Parking" incorrectly cited several parking lots as parking lots for on-campus students. Lots N4, S4, CD and N5 are student and employee lots and therefore might not be eliminated, and N7 is an employee lot.

The Daily Tar Heel regrets the errors.

STICKY SITUATION

DTH/VICTORIA FRANGOULIS

After a chilly weekend, sophomore Jacalyn Barnes enjoys a warm Tuesday afternoon by grabbing some cotton candy in the Pit. Barnes, an international studies and political science major, succeeds in getting as much candy on herself as she does on her stick. The cotton candy machine was for a fund-raiser sponsored by cONcEpts (of color) in the Pit on Tuesday afternoon.

Construction Error Blocks Residence Hall Heat

By LIZZIE BREYER
University Editor

Students waking up on North Campus were greeted with cold showers Tuesday after a construction error knocked out hot water and heat to many residence hall rooms.

Richard Marks, area director for the Olde Campus Upper Quad, sent an e-mail to all students living in his area Tuesday afternoon telling them about the situation, which is related to North Campus construction.

Crews are working along Raleigh Street to replace the steam line that provides hot water to many North Campus residence halls. "A lot of this is due to the construction on North Campus," Marks said. "It's not anything intentional; it's just due to the construction."

Marks said he wasn't sure of the exact nature of the construction error. But he said workers were trying to restore hot water and heat as quickly as possible. "We're just asking the residents to bear with us and be patient," Marks said.

He said the error was not limited to the residence halls immediately surrounding the construction. "The whole northern region was affected," he said. "It wasn't just the upper quad."

Rebecca Casey, assistant director of housing and residential education, said she was unaware of the lack of heat and hot water as of 4 p.m. Tuesday.

Casey said she would gather information and address student concerns once she became aware of the situation.

Anna Carlton, a sophomore who lives in Ruffin Residence Hall, said she was distressed about the lack of heat in her room. "My room has no heat, and I refuse to sleep there," she said. "It's cold, and my roommate is whining."

Freshman Matt Zachek, a resident of Mangum Residence Hall, said he was particularly upset the error was a result of the construction, which he said already is inconvenient.

"I got in the shower, and normally it heats up pretty fast, but it was freezing - I jumped in, felt it and jumped right back out," Zachek said. "I got the e-mail about how they made a mistake, and it kind of pissed me off."

Marks said he hopes this kind of problem will not occur again but he said the only solution is to keep students aware and ask them to be patient.

"We don't know what will happen in the future," he said. "We didn't expect to have this problem now."

"We can try to prepare the students by letting them know."
