sors and white female professors at N.C. State were making significantly less money than their white male counterparts with similar experience and rank.

One hundred and thirty-four of N.C. State's 161 minority male professors and 237 of the school's 371 female professors are slated to receive salary increases as a result of the study. The increases — paid for by a tuition increase that is already in effect — will be implemented in November. The salary increases will be retroactive from July 1, 2001.

UNC-CH Provost Robert Shelton said he has been in contact with N.C. State officials. He said the University is studying the issue and researching its past efforts before taking action. Shelton said there are several factors contributing to the disparities. He said female faculty members are often older when they receive their degree and that they take more time off to tend to family matters. Shelton also said that in some fields faculty leaders tend to be male and that by habit leadership is passed on to other men.

But Shelton said the issue should be studied to ensure that certain faculty members are not being discriminated against. "We need to make sure we are rewarding people appropriately for their contributions towards the mission of the University."

scares at home and the new responsibilities of government and all Americans. He also outlined actions that the government has taken to strengthen homeland security, including deploying National Guard troops to airports and giving law enforcement authorities more powers.

On Friday, Bush was announcing an increase in the use of National Guard personnel for airport security, possibly including the stationing of guardsmen at airport boarding gates.

"We are a nation awakened to danger," Bush said.

alert and being intimidated," Bush said. "This nation will not be intimidated."

"Our great national challenge is to hunt down the terrorists and strengthen our protections against future attacks; our great national opportunity is to preserve forever the good that has resulted," Bush said. "Through the tragedy, we are renewing and reclaiming our strong American values."

He spoke in Atlanta, chosen because it is home to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which has been at the forefront of the fight against the anthrax outbreak.

In other news, the Senate Finance Committee narrowly approved a $66.4 billion economic stimulus package Thursday, widening the rift between Democrats and Republicans over government spending versus tax cuts and foreshadowing an all-out battle in the Senate.

The committee voted 11-10 along party lines for a $66.4 billion Democratic bill that is vastly different from President Bush's tax relief proposals and the $100 billion package passed last month by the GOP-led House.

Democrats said the measure was the right medicine for the economy because it would spur consumer spending and would do more for laid-off workers than Republican alternatives. But GOP senators called it a partisan exercise filled with unnecessary spending that has little chance of becoming law.

"In the end, I think this bill is pitiful," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas. "It's insulting. I'm glad I don't have to vote for it."

Local Band Hits Road For Tour

Fin Fang Foom's East Coast tour will bring it to play at Go! Rehearsal Studios in Chapel Hill on Sunday.

By NICK PARKER
Staff Writer

Michael Triplett, vocalist and guitarist for local band Fin Fang Foom, stumbles out of his tour bus late one morning, complaining of the cold and tired of the road, but excited — his band has finally broken new ground.

Fin Fang Foom has had a cult following of its eclectic sound — but the release of the band's first full length LP, Texture, Structure and the Condition of Moods, represents a major stepping stone on a path it has been travelling for a long time.

The band boasts an interesting mix between psychedelic distortion and talented riffs and rhythms. The result is a powerful blow that soothes while simultaneously penetrating, blending in a cool, electronic whirl.

Triplett has been with the group for more than 10 years, watching both the individual members and the band mature. He said everyone is excited because this represents something that the group has wanted to do for a long time. "This album is really important, especially for us," Triplett said. "Having a record with all of our stuff is more important than selling it."

Their "stuff," however it might be described, is above all their own. Sporting a distinctly aural sound, the band stands in a unique field. Triplett, Michael Glass and Edwin Sanchez all gain their individual styles from personal and peer inspiration, Triplett said.

"To be honest, I don't think that any one band or style has really influenced us," he said. "We are three people that play rather awkwardly coming together in a balanced medium."

Though the blending of their instruments seems flawless, the production of the album didn't go entirely smoothly. In addition to only having one short week to pump out the 10 songs, Fin Fang Foom encountered a few snags in the studio.

"At one point the main AC in the recording studio broke so we were all basically sitting around in our underwear putting this thing together," he said. "I actually wanted to go out and buy a bunch of Speedos for us all to record in."

Along with the release of the album, Fin Fang Foom is touring the entire east coast, with a Sunday stop at Go! Rehearsal Studios in Chapel Hill. The band views this tour as more of a way to meet new and interesting people while trying to spread its sound.

In spite of all of the great experiences, the road has begun to wear upon Triplett. Between driving for hours, sleeping in the van and playing a show every night, Triplett looks forward to returning home.

"This one guy's house that we stayed at in Columbus, Ohio, was disgusting. It was so filthy that you had to wipe your feet off on the way out," Triplett said. "There were TV dinners and bowls of cereal that had been there for months. Needless to say I slept in the van again that night... I miss my bed."

With its first full length LP just released and a month long, grueling tour under way, the band has faced many trials. But Triplett is still proud to say that the entire experience has not deterred the band's goals or changed the members in any negative way.

"I don't really think that this has changed anything," Triplett said. "In fact, I think it has brought us closer together, made us even more focused."

A long standing band that is finally getting the attention it deserves, Fin Fang Foom is still focused on the important elements.

"Our main goal is just to survive," Triplett said. "We want to just keep making music, meeting people and having fun."
